Threat to free economy seen

Nixon aides fear public wants to keep controls

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — On the eve of Phase 4, the Nixon administration is showing increasing worry that Americans are beginning to accept wage and price controls as a permanent fixture.

Some top administration economists have taken pains to point out that Phase 4 will not be a permanent controls program and to argue that controls are incompatible with a free enterprise system.

They are concerned now because the government's own soundings of public opinion show consumers generally favoring controls.

The American economy has been under some sort of wage and price controls since Aug. 15, 1971, when President Nixon imposed a wage price freeze in an attempt to control inflation.

The country has gone through the hard controls of Phase 2, which people think worked, and the soft controls of Phase 3, which people think did not work. With a new price freeze in place, the administration now is about to announce its Phase 4 controls program.

Presidential Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Saturday

there has been no decision yet on when the Phase 4 program will be announced but he said further word on that should come Monday.

He said the economic program was one of the things President Nixon discussed in the hospital Saturday with his chief of staff, Gen. Alexander M. Haig Jr.

Secretary of the Treasury George P. Shultz has said that while Phase 4 will be tough, it will also provide for a phaseout of the controls program.

Phase 3, however, also was designed to end wage and price controls. But it had the opposite effect of leading to a more rigid program.

It is unlikely the government can get out of wage and price controls until it restricts inflation itself or convinces the American people that controls won't work.

American consumers seem especially concerned over food prices, which increased at an annual rate of 25.4 per cent under Phase 3. Administration officials are saying they may increase again by half that much even under the sterner Phase 4 controls.

A consumer adviser to the Cost of Living Council, Kay Ryan, said in a recent report to the council that consumers think controls will work.

"The prevailing consumer view, supported by a body of economic expertise, is that not only are controls desirable at this time, they are workable and the government should be committed to retaining controls until such time as the root causes of inflation are eliminated."

A council spokesman said most consumers seem to like the current freeze because it has stopped the increase in prices at least temporarily.

This apparent popularity of the freeze has caused council director

AF lies on Cambodia disclosed

Ex-major to tell of falsified records

By SEYMOUR M. HERSH

WASHINGTON — A former Air Force major has told the Senate Armed Services Committee that in early 1970 he participated in the widespread falsification of records to hide the fact that U.S. B52s were bombing Cambodia, Senate sources said Saturday.

They said the the former officer, Hal M. Knight, now a graduate student in Memphis, has been summoned to testify in an extraordinary public session of the committee scheduled for Monday morning.

The committee thus will open — at least tentatively — another phase into its investigation of the air war. The investigation began last fall with three months of study and hearings into the unauthorized bombings and false reportings laid to now-retired Maj. Gen. John D. Lavelle, the former commander of the Seventh Air Force. Lavelle was demoted two ranks and retired after admitting that he ordered more than 25 unauthorized raids of North Vietnam in 1971 and 1972— nearly two years after incidents Knight cited.

At the time of the falsifications Knight described, the United States officially recognized the neutrality of the regime of Prince Norodom Sihanouk, the Cambodian chief of state.

No public announcements of any B52 raids in Cambodia were made until the invasion there began in May, 1970. On a number of occasions in 1969 and early 1970, American officials had apologized or in other ways expressed official regret at what were described as accidental violations of Cambodia air space.

Senate sources said that Knight's account of his involvement in the false reporting was first provided to Sen. Harold E. Hughes, D-Iowa, a member of the committee who was instrumental in prompting last year's Lavelle investigations.

Hughes passed on the Knight accusations during a closed committee meeting Friday with Gen. George S. Brown, who was nominated July 3 by President Nixon to be the Air Force chief of staff. Brown directed the tactical air operations in Southeast Asia from 1968 until the fall of 1970, when he was replaced by Lavelle.

In a telephone interview, Knight said that he began to falsify bombing records soon after he arrived in South Vietnam in February, 1970, and added that other officers serving with him in the Strategic Air Command had said that the illegal procedures then in use had been in operation since the 1968 Tet offensive.

"I would estimate that I personally submitted at least two dozen

MOCKUP of the docking module to be used in Soviet-American space mission is examined by cosmonaut Alexsey Leonov, left, NASA astronauts Thomas Stafford and Donald Slayton, and cosmonaut Valeriy Kubasov at Rockwell International's Space Division in Downey.

Joint space crew views orbit craft

By JOHN SHEEHAN
Staff Writer

Twenty-five members of the Soviet Academy of Sciences and U.S. National Aeronautics and Space Administration Apollo/Soyuz test project delegations Saturday visited Rockwell International's Downey Space Division to view work in progress on the American spacecraft that will be used in history's first international space mission.

The flight, scheduled June 15, 1975, calls for Soviet and U.S. spaceships in earth orbit to test rendezvous and docking equipment and procedures.

The Southland visitors were part of the Russian and American space scientists meeting at the Lyndon B. Johnson Space Center in Houston. The cosmonauts return to Houston today.

A major objective of the program is the design and testing of a universal docking mechanism, half of which will be developed and built in the USSR, the other half in the U.S.

The visiting group included Capt. Chester Lee, U.S. Space program director and astronauts Donald K. "Deke" Slayton, and Gen. Thomas P. Stafford,

Members of the Soviet group included Prof. Konstantin Bushuyev, senior member of the Soviet delegation; Dr. Viktor Legostayev, of guidance and control; Igor Prisevok, of mission planning and operations; Gen. Vladimir Shatalov, of cosmonaut training; and cosmonauts Dr. Aleksey Yeliseyev, Col. Aleksey Leonov, Col. Valeriy Kubasov, Anatoliy Filipchenko, Nikolai Rukanishnikov, Vladimir Dzhanibekov, Boris Andreyev, Yuriy Romanenko, and Aleksandr Ivanchenkov.

The cylindrical docking module is approximately 10 feet long and five feet in diameter. The American half of the new universal docking mechanism will be one of its ends, while the other which attaches to the Apollo—will have the docking sytem used in the U.S. lunar missions.

Other equipment includes operational controls, provisions for oxygen and nitrogen, a temperature control system, floodlights and food supply. An intercom system will also be included.

Warm, sunny outlook predicted for week

The sun will shine on the Southland today.

Early morning fog and haze will be replaced before noon by bright sunshine, forecasters promise. Beaches and inland areas will warm to an expected high of 80 today, while overnight lows will dip into the 60's.

Outlook for the coming week promises more sun and warming trends during the days, with moist marine air at night as a high pressure area remains stable several hundred miles off the Northern California coast.

Probers find pressure on funds givers

By BEN A. FRANKLIN

WASHINGTON — Government investigators say they are finding a pattern of high pressure solicitation for very large contributions to President Nixon's 1972 re-election campaign among executives in the country's most powerful corporations.

The investigators, representing both the Senate Watergate committee and the special Watergate prosecution team under Archibald Cox, have been following the footsteps of Maurice H. Stans and Herbert W. Kalmbach, Nixon's principal fund-raisers in last year's record harvest of some $55 million for the Republican presidential campaign.

As a result, the investigators say, they believe that the aggressive Nixon money drive may have led to sometimes winked-at violations of federal election law.

Thus far, the investigators have declined to discuss in detail new cases that Cox hinted broadly last week may duplicate or go beyond the illegal contribution acknowledged on July 6 by American Airlines.

Both the Senate committee and the Cox office are working from a list of about 2,000 actual, though still unreported and undisclosed, executive gifts to the Nixon campaign that totaled some $19 million.

In offering American Airlines possible mitigation of prosecution for confessing its illegal act — and in obvious reference to other names on the secret list — Cox warned other unnamed company officers last week that "whether they come forward or not, we intend to get to the bottom of illegal funding practices."

Without benefit of any names on the secret list, the New York Times

Metal-workers strike approved

Sheet metal workers voted Saturday to go on strike Monday, tying up the construction industry in the Los Angeles area covered by Local 108.

Jack Stewart, local business manager, said there was only one dissenting vote among the 2,700 members attending a meeting in Los Angeles' Embassy Auditorium. The union represents 4,000 workers in the heating and air conditioning field. A union spokesman said a strike would have a crippling effect on new construction since work on heating and cooling systems would be stopped.

Sheet metal workers in Orange County and Long Beach went on strike June 30 but Local 108 members had been working without a contract.

Nixon reported 'slightly' better

Doctor suggests 3-weeks rest

By HELEN THOMAS

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Nixon's personal physician reported "very slight improvement" in his overall condition Saturday, but said the viral pneumonia had spread to his left lung and that he ought to get about three weeks of combined hospital care and rest before resuming full-time duties.

Even as White House physician Walter R. Tkach was relaying word on the President's condition, Nixon was said to be working from his bed at Bethesda Naval Hospital in suburban Maryland despite some continuation of the chest pains which first led to his confinement Thursday.

"This man doesn't give up easily," the doctor said. "He didn't call me until he was flat on his back."

IN A LATE medical bulletin, doctors said a chest X-ray revealed "some clearing" of the infection in about one-third to one-half of Nixon's right lung along with the evidence that the virus had spread to the left lower lung base.

"The President has been resting with less discomfort today," Tkach reported. "He continues to run a fever. He is breathing easier and has not experienced as much chest pain."

In sum, the doctor said Nixon was thought to be responding satisfactorily to treatment.

He cautioned, however, that the President has lost a little weight and "he's still a sick man."

At an earlier briefing, Tkach said he felt it would be best to keep the President in the hospital for perhaps seven to 10 days. "We want to be sure there is no relapse," he said.

Following Nixon's release, the doctor said he thought the President should have another 10 days of rest and recuperation.

DESPITE TKACH'S recommendation, both the doctor and White House press secretary Ron Ziegler said Nixon might decide to return to the White House as soon as he is released from the hospital, possibly Tuesday or Wednesday.

Asked if the Watergate scandal had contributed to Nixon's illness, Tkach said: "I won't answer that."

Tkach and the staff of doctors working with him have diagnosed the disease as viral pneumonia, which accounts for approximately 75 per cent of all short-term, acute lung infections. It is troublesome, but usually not serious.

So many people have it that doctors often refer to it in milder forms as "walking pneumonia."

Depending on the severity, the symptoms of viral pneumonia range from a mild fever and discomfort to pain, high fevers and wracking coughs that disturb rest. The coughing is caused by an irri-

Blast guts Sinatra boat off Catalina

Four friends of Frank Sinatra and two crewmen Saturday were evacuated from the entertainer's $250,000, 85-foot luxury yacht after the craft's port engine exploded and set the vessel afire off the east end of Catalina Island, authorities said.

Coast Guard officials, who insisted Sinatra was not aboard, said the six passengers escaped in the yacht's 13-foot lifeboat and were picked up minutes later by an unidentified sailboat. Only one person on the yacht was identified: Capt. Claude F. Swan, 17772 Bigelow Park, Tustin.

The "Christina" was on a week-long cruise from its permanent mooring at Marina del Rey, authorities said. A Sinatra spokesman said the yacht is named after Sinatra's younger daughter, singer Tina. He declined further comment on the accident.

Sex movie-makers challenge high court ruling

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press

Some 100 film-makers, distributors and exhibitors who specialize in erotic movies, held an emergency convention in Hollywood Saturday to plan mutual action in a battle against censorship.

The meeting of the Adult Film Association of America, called in response to the recent U.S. Supreme Court ruling on obscenity, featured rousing speeches by several persons who urged the sexploitation specialists not to lose faith in their fight to stay in business.

"Do not be of bad cheer," said attorney John Weston. "Do not be downhearted. We will win the victories. We will assist you."

The association members, who include such film-makers as Russ Meyer, "the king of the nudies," approved plans to bring a civil suit in opposition of the Supreme Court ruling and to press for legislative action which would change state laws in their favor.

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — California will have to enact new laws to meet the standards and requirements of the recent U.S. Supreme Court decisions on obscenity, Atty. Gen. Evelle Younger said Friday. He said his advisory committee on obscenity and pornography would propose legislation to reflect the latest court decision.

The association's chief counsel, Stanley Fleishman, said he planned to file a civil suit, probably in the District of Columbia, challenging federal obscenity statutes as an unconstitutional infringement on freedom of speech.

"What we say now is that books and magazines and movies that deal with sex are part of freedom of speech," Fleishman said. "You cannot separate speech that deals with sex from speech that deals with politics, religion or any other subject."

He said the association would ask legislatures to alter state laws to say that consenting adults may see whatever kind of movies they wish as long as the material is not forced upon them and is not peddled to minors.

Fleishman criticized the Supreme Court decision for being vague. "If anyone knows what a prurient interest is, I wish he'd tell me," he said, drawing applause from the gathered members. "It's not a mere interest in sex. The court is not trying to make eunuchs of us."

George Newman, an attorney fighting rulings against pornography in Detroit, flew to Los Angeles for the meeting and told members he would raise the legal issue of the right to privacy.

He claims that patrons of blue movie houses have the constitutional right to view adult films in the privacy of those theaters as well as in the privacy of their homes.

Association President Dave Friedman, a producer of sexploitation films, showed members the first in a series of "movie trailers" — a short subject preceding a film which will be distributed in a publicity barrage.

The film shows Fleishman seated in his legal office telling moviegoers to write their legislators and demand the right to see whatever kind of films they want to see.

Posters for exhibition outside adult movie theaters also were distributed, urging freedom from censorship.

Silence over Kissinger switch

Combined News Services

The White House is remaining curiously silent about rumors that presidential aide Henry Kissinger will replace William Rogers as secretary of state.

Presidential Press Secretary Ronald Ziegler continued to reply "No comment" reports that Rogers will leave foggy bottom, possibly by September. White House scources say Ziegler has not discussed the reports of Kissinger's taking over the State Department with the President, who is recovering from viral pneumonia at Bethesda Naval Hospital.

Kissinger himself says he has had no discussion with Nixon about a possible change.

Meanwhile, Senate Democratic leader Mike Mansfield called Rogers "the best secretary of state. . .in my 36 years here," and said he hoped the rumors of a switch were untrue.

Chavez

Farm labor leader Cesar Chavez was presented with the Reinhold Neibuhr Award at a labor rally in Lamont, Calif. He is only the third person to receive the award, which includes a grant of $5,000.

The award, in memory of the American philosopher and theologian, is made to "the person or persons whose contributions in the area of social justice, public life or world affairs, best exemplify the spirit of Reinhold Neibuhr."

Confirmed

The Senate Saturday confirmed John L. McLucas as secretary of the Air Force and Gen. George Brown as Air Force chief of staff.

McLucas, now Air Force undersecretary, succeeds Dr. Robert Seamans Jr., who resigned. Brown is director of the Air Force Systems Command and headed the 7th Air Force in Vietnam between 1968 and 1970.

Curious

Three men who set out on their first ocean voyage "out of curiosity" arrived in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., Saturday after an 11-week trans-Atlantic crossing in a 43-foot sailboat.

"To be really honest, I was more curious than anything else," said David McKinney, who owns the "Chuuan," "We didn't do it to be brave, but out of curiosity."

Three Dutchmen set out with McKinney from the Hague, Holland, April 28, but navigator Dr. Jerome Boom changed his mind and stayed in Portugal when the boat stopped there in early May.

Jan Snyder, 29, and film producer Burt Roozemond, 44, stayed on with McKinney, who took over the boat's navigation although he admittedly didn't know much about charting courses.

At one point, when they were a few miles off the Canary Islands, McKinney said, his mathematical computations had them plotted as being in the suburbs of Paris. But otherwise the trip was mostly uneventful, said the American from Des Moines, Iowa, who has lived in Holland for the past 10 years.

Volatile

Peter C. Murphy Jr., former White House advance man who admitted tearing down an antiwar sign during the 1972 presidential campaign in Pekin, Ill., said Saturday his action pleased the crowd.

"I was a hero. Little old women were saying, 'Thank God,'" Murphy said.

Murphy disclosed his action during an investigation by the Secret Service to determine if its agents were responsible for the incident. Murphy, head of a family-owned lumber firm in Eugene, Ore., was serving as a volunteer White House staff advance man.

Last day

Eight U.S. congressmen and their wives and aides toured Shanghai, China's largest city, Saturday on the last day of a two-week visit to China.

After a 90-minute train ride through rich rice country of the Yangtze River Delta from Soochow in neighboring Kiangsu Province, the group arrived in Shanghai and checked into the Ching Kiang Hotel, the same complex where President Nixon and his entourage stayed last year.

During the day, the visitors paid a call on a deaf mute school in the Hung Kou District of Shanghai, where students are treated by acupuncture, and were guests at a revolutionary ballet performance of "The Red Detachment of Women."

Too short

A Marine who was held in a North Vietnamese POW camp nearly five years while the Pentagon reported him dead and buried said Saturday that Houston police and fire departments rejected his application because he is too short.

"I tried to change their minds but it didn't do any good," Sgt. Ronald L. Ridgeway said.

Ridgeway, 23, is 5-5¾. Minimum height standards are 5-7 for policemen and 5-6 for firemen.

Exaggerated

Evangelist Billy Graham says he hasn't been in close contact with President Nixon for 18 months and that his relationship with Nixon has been exaggerated.

Graham, in Minnesota for a crusade at the state fairgrounds in St. Paul, made his remarks in an interview published in Sunday's editions of the Minneapolis Tribune.

"I don't see the President as often as people think I do," he said.

Gypsies rejected by 3 nations

Poles prefer death to going back

NEW YORK (UPI) — Three young Polish Gypsies who have been shuttled across the Atlantic five times in the last week said Saturday they would hang themselves rather than return to Poland.

"We want nothing but freedom," said 24-year-old Jan Hornjak, thumping his chest. "I am a good man and I will work hard."

Hornjak, his wife Helen, 23, their 4-year-old daughter Agatha, and Robert Kolompar, 19, Helen's brother, were caught in a three-way rejection game between the U.S., Italy and West Germany after they arrived in New York from Milan, Italy, last Sunday with stolen German passports.

The four are free for the weekend, pending a hearing in immigration court Tuesday.

They were staying in the Queens Borough home of a cousin, Loleh Lakotosc, a roofer. Lakotosc has five children of his own crowded into the three-bedroom house, but he said with a laugh, "When you have seven people, four more is nothing. There is always room."

Hornjak, a Catholic, nervously twisted his thick black moustache and looked at his tiny wife and child. "We will hang ourselves before we go back," he said through an interpreter. "I want my Agatha to grow up in a free land. I want her to have a good school."

Hornjak said he bought the passports in Italy for his family and brother-in-law for 1,000 marks (about $00) apiece. "I thought they were good. We wanted to come to America and did not think there would be a problem."

The Hornjaks are gypsies from near Krakow, and Kolompar is from Warsaw. Hornjak was a coppersmith in Poland and says he would like to find some work similar to that in America.

The quartet's saga began last Sunday when they arrived at New York on a Trans World Airlines flight from Milan. A check showed the passports were stolen and TWA was ordered by Immigration Service officials to fly them back to Milan.

But because flights to Milan were booked up, the airline flew them to Frankfurt, Germany, for a transfer flight. Authorities in Frankfurt confiscated the stolen passports and placed the four on the next TWA flight back to New York.

When they arrived in New York, authorities ordered them back to Milan, whee re Itaaian officials refused to accept them on grounds they had no papers with which to enter Italy.

The 15,000-mile game of Atlantic hopping came to an end Thursday when they arrived back in New York and U.S. officials decided to grant them temporary haven until the case is cleared up.

He found treasure but is losing money

KEY WEST, Fla. (UPI) —Mel Fisher estimates he has brought up $1 million from the ocean bottom off the Marquesas Islands and may be sitting on top of another $600 million in gold and silver.

But Fisher says even his latest discovery of Spanish treasure hasn't bailed him out of a financial hole.

From his offices in the replica of a 16th century Spanish galleon he operates as a museum near Key West's turtle pens, the tall, graying Fisher said Saturday his company spent $1 million in three years of searching for and salvaging the remnants of a Spanish treasure fleet.

He estimated it will cost another $600,000 to bring up the remaining treasure from the wreckage of the vessel Atocha, which piled up on the treacherous shallows along the edge of the straits of Florida during a 1622 hurricane.

The state of Florida, which has already taken the treasure Fisher and his co.workers have recovered to vaults in Tallahassee, gets to keep 24 per cent of all that is brought up, under the contract which gives Fisher rights to scour 18 square miles of ocean bottom.

Still, the 50-year-old president of Treasure Salvors Inc. is far from unhappy. After years of trying, he has realized the treasure hunter's dream.

Robert Williams, the state's director of archives and history who came to Key West to personally supervise cataloging and packing of treasure into chests for the trip to Tallahassee, has conceded that "if this is the wreck it appears to be, it is potentially one of the biggest finds of its kind in modern times."

Historians and treasure researchers have estimated the Atocha carried some $400 million in her holds in silver bars, silver coins, jewelry, silver place settings and candlesticks. Another estimated $200 million went down with a sister ship, the Marharita, which is thought to be nearby.

Even though Fisher knows he has found where the ship went down, he still must fight to find its treasure, buried under three and a half centuries of silt, scattered by the sea, covered by ballast and the sands of the area key westers call "the quick sands."

Murders terrorize L.B. neighbors

By STAN LEPPARD

West Burnett Street along the two-block stretch between Santa Fe and Baltic Avenues, on the Long Beach West Side south of Willow Street, is a quiet street of modest homes.

The homes are small and none of them are new, but they are neat and well-tended. The houses and tidy lawns reflect a pride of ownership that has resisted displacement despite the gradual deterioration of the West Side area into a crime problem sector.

One of the neatest homes along the street is a one-story, tan stucco residence at 1602 W. Burnett St. It was the home of Robert and Florence Buckley for 27 years, and Mrs. Buckley lived there for eight years prior to their marriage.

IN SPITE of the fact that both suffered from heart ailments and Mrs. Buckley had a recent series of small strokes that left her virtually unable to speak, they kept the house and the tiny lawn neat and sparkling. Buckley was out every morning watering the grass, flowers and shrubbery, and washing down the sidewalks in a 6 a.m. ritual.

"They were wonderful people, wonderful neighbors," said Mrs. Emma Davidson, neighbor and close friend for more than 25 years. "They never bothered anyone, nor had a cross word for anybody.

"Everyone keeps saying we are living in a jungle, nowadays. I've said it myself many times. But I didn't realize it was absolutely true until last Wednesday."

At 9 last Tuesday night, Mrs. Davidson was ironing in her living room when she heard an explosion — "a bang, like a firecracker" — from somewhere west of the Davidson home. A second or two later, she heard another.

"Some of the kids still have fireworks left over from the Fourth," she commented to her husband, George Davidson, who was reading in the living room.

SILENCE settled over the neighborhood after the second explosion, and Davidson commented: "Guess they only had the two left. Anyway, I hope so."

There were no further explosions, and the Davidsons had forgotten the matter before they retired for the night.

At 7 a.m. the next day, Davidson went out in his yard to do some chores. Glancing over toward the Buckley home, he was surprised to note that Robert Buckley had not yet watered his lawn and washed down the sidewalk as per long custom.

At 9 a.m. that day, one of Mrs. Buckley's three daughters — Mrs. Grace Long, of Huntington Beach — telephoned her parents and received no response. She kept calling every few minutes without success, her worry growing, and finally called St. Mary's Hospital, where the couple would go if an emergency arose.

At 2 that afternoon, Mrs. Long left Huntington Beach and drove to the residence on West Burnett Street to see what was wrong. She tried the front door and found it locked, and received no answer to her knock.

MRS. LONG walked around the house to a rear utility door and peered through the glass. From this point, she could see the still form of her father lying face down on the floor of the living room.

She could also see at a glance that clothing and personal items were strewn around the floor of the always neat interior of the house, and it was obvious even to her limited view that the place had been ransacked.

Mrs. Long ran to the Davidson residence and shouted to Mrs. Davidson through an open living room window: "My Dad's on the floor and I can't see my mother I've got to call for help!"

Mrs. Davidson told her to call the fire department station two blocks away, and gave her the number. The Davidson's then took Mrs. Long to the home of another neighbor, Mrs. Beryl Waller, and told her to remain there while they checked the Buckley home.

The Davidson's found the rear utility door was not locked, and entered the house. They found Robert Buckley lying in the position described by Mrs. Long. Nearby Mrs. Buckley lay face down on the sofa. Pools of blood had spread beneath the bodies of both victims.

"I HOPE & never live to see anything like that again," said Davidson, relating the story three days later.

Mrs. Davidson forced herself to feel for a pulse in each of the still figures, and ascertained that both were dead. At this point they saw Mrs. Long approaching the house from the Waller residence, and they ran out the front door to intercept her and tell her to remain at Mrs. Waller's home until authorities arrived.

Paramedics arriving at the scene less than two minutes later immediately saw the victims were beyond medical help and that it was a case of double homicide. They radioed for police.

Patrol Officer Ed Wysocki, first officer to arrive, determined that Robert and Florence Buckley each had been shot through the head by an intruder believed to have entered through the unlocked rear utility room door before the Buckleys would have locked up and retired on the previous night.

"THERE was no sign of resistance or a struggle," Wysocki said. "It does appear that the intruder ordered the victims to lie down, then cold-bloodedly fired a single shot into the head of each before ransacking the house."

Why?

That's the question that plagues neighbors of the Buckleys, as well as police.

The victims, both 68 years of age, lived simply and on a modest scale. There was no reason for anyone to believe that either had secreted any large sums of money in the house, and thought it was well-furnished it contained nothing transportable of sufficient value to warrant such a brutal double execution.

"The whole neighborhood is uneasy," Mrs. Davidson said. "Nothing has ever happened around here like this. Oh, there have been a lot of burglaries and small theivery — but now we realize something horrible is loose.

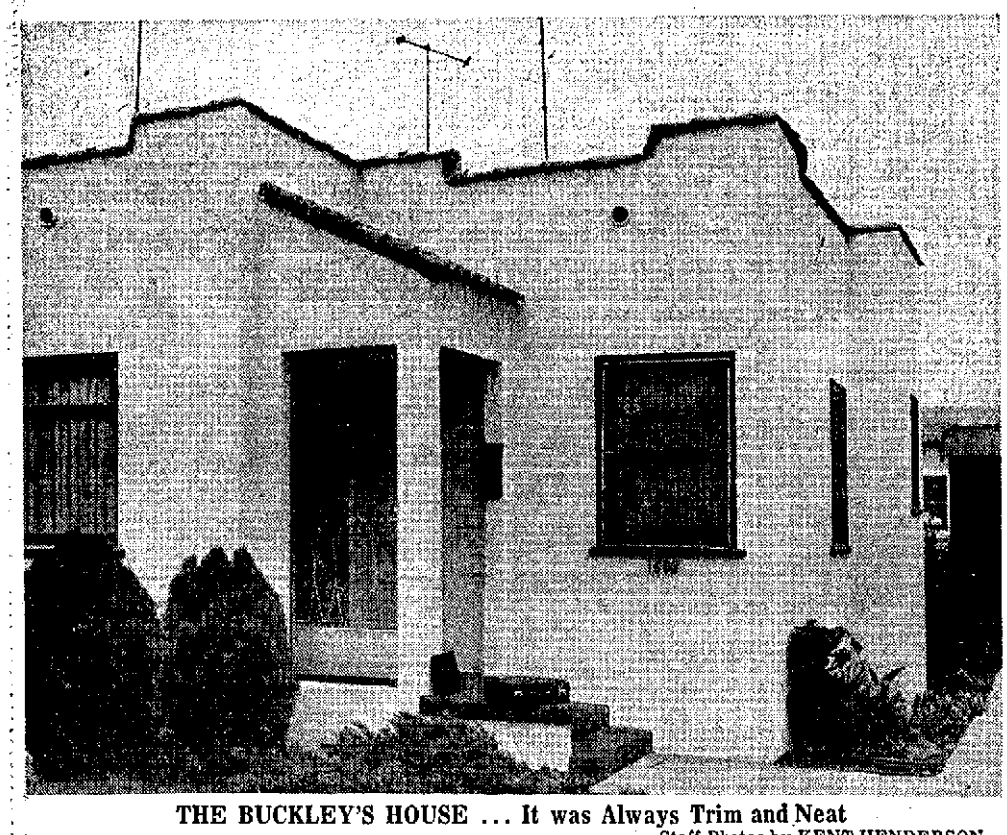

"If a terrible thing like this could happen to the Buckleys, who were as nice a couple as anybody in the world, it could happen to anyone."

West Burnett Street along the two-block stretch between Santa Fe and Baltic Avenues looks the same today as it did a month ago.

But it is not the same. And it will never be the same again for the people who live there.

1 killed, 4 hurt in Norwalk bar holdup shooting melee

A Norwalk tavern robbery early Saturday turned into a wild shooting melee in which a Downey man was killed and four others wounded when angered patrons tried to disarm two gunmen and club them with pool cues.

Authorities said the incident occurred at The Office, 11031 E. Firestone Blvd., at 1:25 a.m.

One patron, James B. Burchett, 32, of 10824 Benfield Ave., was shot in the chest when he tried to wrestle a weapon away from one gunman. He died at the scene, sheriff's deputies said.

Arrested on suspicion of homicide and armed robbery were Wayne Babcock, 40, and Gary Peterson, 32, both of 11690 Ramond Blvd., El Monte.

Babcock is in critical condition at the prison ward of County-USC Medical Center. He was shot in the head, the left side and the left wrist.

Peterson suffered a severe head wound when a patron grabbed his gun away and smashed him with a pool cue. Peterson was booked at Norwalk Sheriff's Station.

Others wounded in the shooting included the bartender Frank G. Olivera, 55, of 14834 Wheatstone Ave., Norwalk, and Danny D. Lewis, 30, of 11034 Dummont Ave., Downey.

Olivera was taken to County-USC Medical Center with a bullet wound in the left side. His condition was described as stable.

Lewis, shot in the groin, was taken to the same hospital where he remains in stable condition.

Investigators said there were 10 patrons in the bar when the gunmen entered. The shooting began, sheriff's deputies said, when Burchett grabbed a gun held by Peterson.

Ten shots were fired in the ensuing fray, but sheriff's homicide detectives unable to say who shot whom and how Babcock was wounded.

When Peterson was hit on the head, investigators said, another patron managed to escape and summon Norwalk sheriff's deputies, who captured Peterson without a struggle.

Five face death by rabies

NICASIO (UPI) — Five Marin County residents who were exposed to two rabid horses may be facing death because they started rabies treatments too late.

Mrs. Eva Ghilotti, who with her husband owns the Mar-Ghi Ranch where an Arabian stallion was shot May 20, blamed Marin County health officials Saturday for not discovering that the animal was rabid. The horse had gone into convulsions and bitten Mrs. Ghilotti, breaking the flesh.

Part of the horse's brain was sent to the county laboratory for analysis, but Mrs. Ghilotti said no evidence of rabies was reported.

THE HEALTH department said the sample was inadequate for testing.

Another horse, a mare, owned by the Ghilottis went into convulsions two weeks ago, and was put to death. Tests indicated the mare was rabid, and a new test on the stallion's brain showed it also had been rabid.

On her ranch Mrs. Ghilotti, the mother of two boys, pointed to some 75-pound feed bags and said, "until a few days ago I could pick up those sacks and haul them out to the corral myself, but now I'm too sore."

Mrs. Ghilotti is aware that the incubation period for rabies is 30 to 60 days, and that the painful Pasteur treatment, a series of daily injections, may have started too late to build an immunity before the rabies virus reaches the brain.

Mrs. Ghilotti's husband, Mario, a road contractor, was exposed on May 20. He put his hand, which had an open cut, into the Stallion's mouth.

NORMAN and Madeline Kreuter, friends of the Ghilottis, also were exposed to the rabid stallion. Mrs. Kreuter, the mother of four children, rode the horse, and her husband, a teacher, shod the rabid animal.

As far Kreuter has refused to take any rabies shots.

Also exposed was Mark Greving, a college student and ranch hand.

4 jailed in bogus bill operation

MODESTO (UPI) — Four men were jailed Saturday after secret service agents confiscated $500,000 in counterfeit $20 bills in a raid on a small printing shop in South Modesto.

Douglas V. Duncan, agent in charge of the Sacramento Secret Service office, said two of the men, Robert W. Smith, 30, and James E. Evans, 42, both of Stockton, were picked up as they loaded sheets of the bogus bills into a car parked near the shop.

Keith R. Frampton, 32, also of Stockton, was arrested a few hours later at his home where he was found frantically burning an estimated $40,000 worth of the phony money in a trash can, Duncan said.

The fourth suspect, Dave T. Moore, 28, was picked up by agents at his Stockton home without incident.

The bills were printed on a $6,000 offset press which also was confiscated in the raid.

76 friends built golf course

San Clemente gift bared

By EVERETT R. HOLLES
New York Times Service

A group of California businessmen who built a golf course for President Nixon on the grounds of his San Clemente estate disclosed Saturday that their gift would amount to at least $200,000, including its upkeep, by the time he leaves the presidency.

The gift, by 76 men who call themselves "the golfing friends of the President" although he apparently has never played the course with any of them, was valued at $85,000 to $100,000 by a spokesman who called it "probably the finest small course in the country."

In addition, members of the select group with its generous sprinkling of millionaires pay annual dues of $250 each or an overall total of about $19,000 a year, for so long as Nixon is president, to maintain the three-par, nine-tee course that undulates over a 2½-acre section of the 26-acre presidential estate.

A full-time greenskeeper, Leo Duell, who is paid by the 76 Club, as it sometimes called, has tended the course since its completion in August, 1970, a year after Nixon acquired the property.

Oscar W. Richard of Newport Beach, who had the original inspiration for the gift and was its chief fund raiser, described the financing of the project in order to "set it apart" from recent disclosures of large sums of government money spent on improving the President's homes in San Clemente and in Key Biscayne, Fla.

"The government has not paid one penny toward building the course or its upkeep, not one shrub of landscaping or a drop of water used on the greens and fairways," said the 64-year-old land developer, banker and longtime friend of Nixon. "Nor will Mr. Nixon bear any of the expense while he is in the White House."

Each of the 76 golfing friends is the possessor of a walnut and silver plaque, inscribed with his name and the presidential seal, and enjoys the distinction of being allowed the use the golf course whenever Nixon or members of his family are not at their Spanish-style residence, La Casa Pacifica, on a bluff overlooking the Pacific Ocean.

Many, but by no means all, of the golfing friends — the list was limited to 76 to "provide a patriotic flavor" — are members of the influential Lincoln Club of Orange County.

RICHARD is a director and vice president of the Republican Club, composed largely of wealthy men who have given large sums to Nixon's political campaigns, some as far back as 1946 when he first ran for Congress from Orange County.

Other contributors from the Lincoln Club include John Wayne, the actor; George Holstein, a builder; Kenneth Gaede, John Lusk, Bob Lynch, the President's brother Donald, and Herbert W. Kalmbach of Newport Beach, who until his involvement in the Watergate scandal was Nixon's personal attorney.

Bob Hope is one of several Palm Springs residents and friends of the President who belong to the 76 club.

A half dozen of the leading land developers of the Newport Beach-Corona del Mar coastal area are donors, as are several bankers and financiers, at least six of whom are rated as multimillionaires. Others are prominent merchants who donated materials for construction of the course.

A number of Democrats are among the donors, according to Richard, but none was found among a dozen golfing friends who were interviewed.

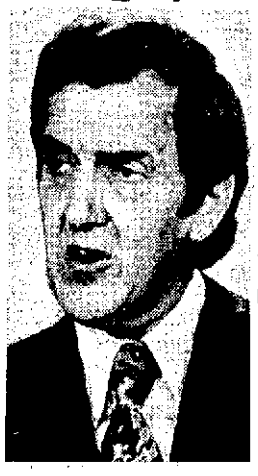

Everyone invited to join the golfing friends was told at the outset that he was to expect no favors from his contribution except the right to use the course on occasion, and that his dues were not tax-deductible.

THE DETAILS provided by Richard of the investment in the golf course increase to nearly a million dollars the money reported in various accounts to have been spent thus far on improvements to the $1.5-million presidential estate here over the last 4½ years.

A series of reports by the General Services Administration produced, on June 21, the latest figure of $703,367 in government funds spent on improvements to the San Clemente house and grounds, with the explanation that they were security measures requested by the Secret Service.

Muskie urges Nixon to reply

By JACKIE LAPIN
Associated Press

SEN. MUSKIE
Deplores Power Erosion

It is the President's responsibility to answer the questions which have eroded his executive authority," Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, D-Maine, told a Los Angeles news conference Saturday.

Muskie said that although executive privilege may protect the President from being forced ti disclose Watergate information, it does not prevent him from vlunteering the information to the Senate Watergate Committee.

"Executive privilege — whatever the limits — is not designed to protect criminal activities," said Muskie.

THE MAINE senator said that if he had been president, he would have found a way to establish a dialogue with the public on Watergate.

"But," he added, "I, too, would have refused a subpoena."

Muskie said he "deplored" the fact that the presidential power had been eroded as a result of Watergate.

"THERE has been evidence that the President recognizes the dissolution of his political strength. The White House has given considration to the Congress' point of view," said Muskie, who ran unsuccessfully for the Democratic presidential nomination in 1972.

Muskie who is co-authoring a bill to be introduced this week which redefines the role of Congress in emergency situations, said he thought Congress was showing more independence from the executive branch as a result of the President's diminished power.

"Congress is exhibiting its strength of will in foreign policy. The Cambodia cutoff reflects the growing determination of Congress to assert its strength of will," said Muskie.

The senator's bill would require the President to justify any emergency action to Congress 30 days after it has been taken.

SPEAKING on Nixon administration economic policies, Muskie said the country is financially mired in a swamp and he called for tougher controls in Phse 4 as a solution.

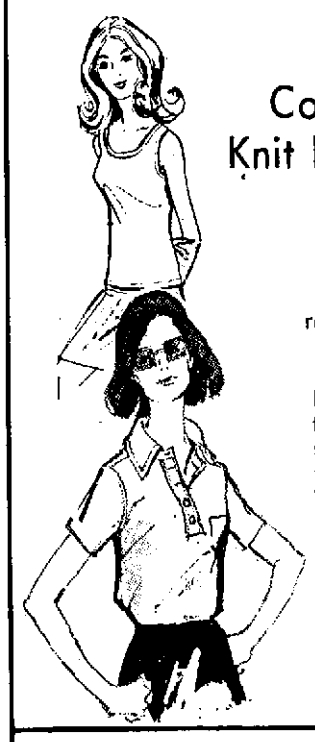

Muskie also addressed himself to Los Angeles' pollution problem.s He said if the automobile is to remain in use in Los Angeles, public support must be mobilized in these areas: control of traffic flow, public mass transit, and effective use of land.

In a speech Saturday night, Muskie demanded that Congress increase federal funds for medical research.

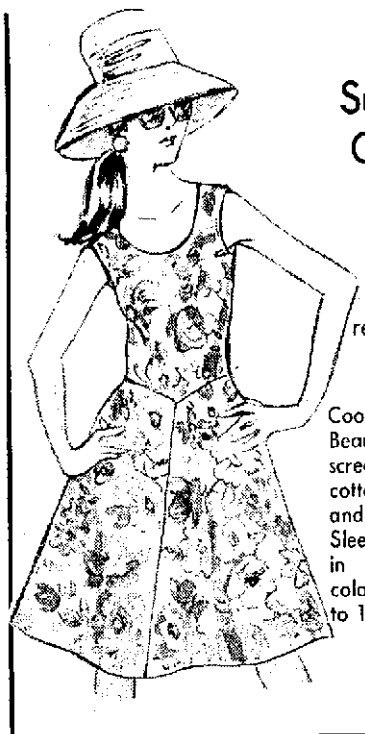

"While the administration has proposed small increases for research funds for cancer and heart and lung disease, all other programs of the National Institutes of Health were to be severely reduced so that the total government funding for research and training would actually have been far below last year's level," he told the City of Hope National Convention.

Pipeline bill fuels Senate debate

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Henry M. Jackson's contention that a seemingly minor amendment could end natural gas regulation sparked a brief heated Senate debate Saturday.

The Senate overwhelmingly approved Jackson's version of an amendment originally introduced by Sen. Dewey Bartlett, R-Okla. The Bartlett amendment sought to exempt small oil and gas wells from price ceilings or allocation controls.

Sixty-nine of the 100 members — a large group for a Saturday — attended the session considering amendments to the Alaska oil pipeline bill.

The Senate is on record against the alternative Canadian route and final votes are scheduled Tuesday on the only remaining major issue: ordering immediate pipeline construction or merely removing the legal blocks cited by a court in delaying construction.

Jackson, D-Wash., claimed the Bartlett amendment was loosely drawn. Just before the scheduled vote, he introduced his substitute proposal which with no time for debate, was adopted 66 to 3.

The Senate then debated what it had done.

Asked for an explanation of his proposal, Jackson said he had taken a good look at the Bartlett amendment and decided it "could include de-regulation of natural gas."

Sen. Clifford P. Hansen, R-Wyo., said: "It might very well include that."

He said he favored such a move.

Jackson, manager of the bill and chairman of the Interior Committee, said he wanted to insure that the Senate didn't vote to deregulate natural gas without anyone realizing what was being done.

Before adjourning, the Senate also:

— Voted 46 to 21, for an amendment by Sen. Philip A. Hart, D-Mich., to permit the Federal Trade Commission to mail questionnaires about its regulatory powers without first getting Office of Management and Budget approval.

Panel OKs foreign aid

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate Foreign Relations Committee Saturday approved a $1.2 billion foreign economic aid bill, which for the first time would subsidize exports to developing countries.

Over the objections of Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield and Committee Chairman J. William Fulbright, D-Ark., members voted for U.S. bilateral assistance to programs such as population planning, rural development and nutrition.

Fulbright, calling the changes "cosmetic," said the U.S. economic condition "does not warrant continuing the program at this level."

But Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, D-Minn., who will manage the bill on the floor, said it represented a fundamental departure from previous foreign aid measures.

The vote was 12 to 3, with Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, joining Mansfield and Fulbright in opposition.

The bill is more than 25 per cent below the administration's request of $1.6 billion. Much of the reduction came from the administration's program for reconstruction of Laos, Cambodia and South Vietnam.

The administration had sought $632 million for these countries, but the committee trimmed it to $376 million. No money was requested or provided for North Vietnam.

The new export subsidy program, tailored along lines of the Lood For Peace Act, would permit 30-year, 3 per cent loans to poor countries for purchase of American goods needed to build up their economies.

Included in the bill was an amendment by Sen. George S. McGovern, D-S.D., to cut off funds for the bombing of Cambodia immediately. The amendment has no practical significance, since there is no way the aid bill can be passed before Aug. 15 — the statutory termination date for U.S. involvement in the war in Indochina.

The measure does, however, contain a provision to toughen the agreement between Congress and President Nixon to end American involvement.

The seasure now is expected to go to the Senate Finance Committee before it is sent to the floor. Fulbright said he understood Finance Chairman Russell Long, D-La., wants to review the new export programs.

Senate votes child abuse bill

MRS. GAIL GETTY
Anxious for Son

Kidnap of Getty his idea?

Girl says he needed money

ROME (UPI) — A German girlfriend of J. Paul Getty III, hippie grandson of the oil billionaire, told police Saturday the missing teen-ager may have faked his own kidnaping to collect any ransom that might be paid for his release.

The youth's mother, Mrs. Gail Getty, called the possibility too "farfetched" for her to believe.

Getty, 17, was last reported seen Monday night in the company of a girl at a coffee shop on Rome's Piazza Novona. On Thursday his mother, who is divorced from J. Paul Getty Jr., received a telephone call at her Rome apartment from a man who said her son had been kidnaped and to get ready to pay ransom. Mrs. Getty told police the caller did not specify a ransom amount.

POLICE SAID one of Getty's friends, indetified as Martine Zacher, 24, said the youth had talked to her of faking his own kidnaping to raise money.

The official quoted Miss Zacher, a german living in Rome, as saying Getty had talked about "a beautiful simulated kidnaping, organized to perfection" several months ago when he was in a "very precarious" financial situation.

"I think that is rather farfetched. I won't consider that," said his mother, the former actress Gail Harris.

Police said that hoax or not, a nationwide search was under way for the youth and Interpol had been asked to try to trace him in other countries.

MRS. GETTY said she did not expect her son's father to come to Rome at the moment. They are divorced.

The young Getty did not live regularly at his mother's apartment, and since she had returned only Thursday from a vacation his absence was not noticed until the phone call.

He was last seen by friends Monday night leaving a Roman discotheque with a French girl. They drove off in her sports car. She is also missing.

The long-haired blond youth was known to frequent Piazaa Navona, Piazza di Spagna and Santa Maria in Trastevere, favorite gathering places for Rome's hippies.

Getty's parents were divorced about eight years ago. His father, J. Paul Getty Jr., remarried in 1966 to Talitha Pohl, a model who died last year from what police said was a massive dose of heroin.

Young Getty's father now lives in London. His 80-year-old grandfather, J. Paul Getty the oilman, lives in the Surrey countryside in a mansion about 17 miles from the British capital.

Despite the family's immense wealth, the youth told friends he wasn't interested in money.

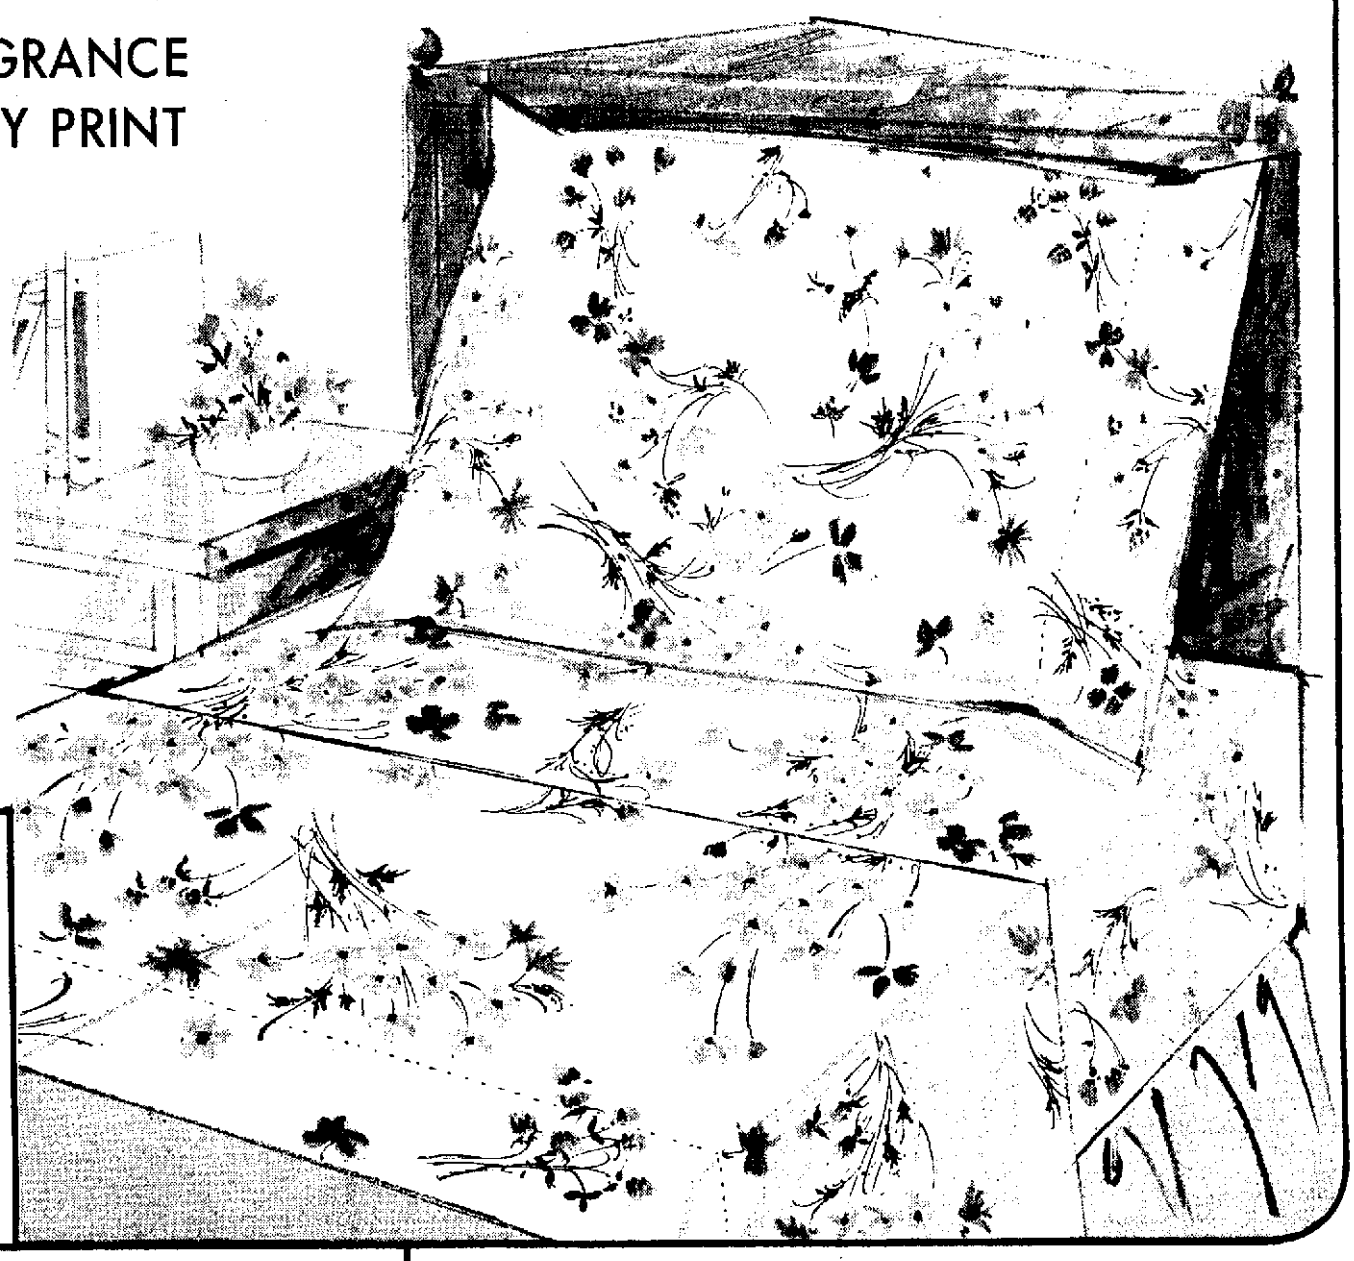

"He never thought of tomorrow," said a former girl friend.

POWs mirrored U.S. split over war

By STEVEN V. ROBERTS
New York Times Service

DENVER — The scene was the courtyard of a prison camp near Hanoi called Plantation Gardens, and the time was August, 1971. Eight young American enlisted men going to wash dishes passed a group of senior officers who were out shaving.

The eight had made statements against the war and developed rather friendly relations with their captors. Their actions had earned them the name "Peace Committee" — and considerable animosity — among their fellow prisoners.

AS THE group approached the officers, Maj. Edward W. Leonard straightened up and shouted to them that they should "stop all forms of cooperation and collaboration with the enemy." According to one officer, one of the enlisted men shouted back, "Who's the enemy."

After the "Peace Committee" members had been repatriated they were charged by Col. Theodore W. Guy of the Air Force with a long list of offenses, including failure to obey Leonard's "order," aiding the enemy and trying to undermine the discipline and morale of other prisoners. Two weeks ago, the Pentagon dismissed the charges — two days after one of the eight, Sgt. Abel Larry Kavanaugh of the Marines, had shot himself to death.

"The reaction these POWs received . . . was the same as antiwar senators received back here from people like Agnew."

KAVANAUGH'S death was a strong reminder that not all the prisoners shared the belief that the Vietnam war was just and had ended in "peace with honor." Not all of the 566 prisoners who gave snappy salutes and patriotic speeches on their return saw the North Vietnamese as an "enemy" who threatened their country's vital interests and had to be defeated.

Interviews with several "Peace Committee" members and other prisoners, here in Denver and other cities, make one thing clear: The experiences of these men, their decision to oppose the war and the angry charges leveled against them, reflect the same divisions found in the broader American society in the Vietnam years.

"THE reaction these POWs received from Guy was the same as antiwar senators received back here from people like Agnew," said Mark Amsterdam, a staff lawyer at the Center for Constitutional Rights in New York and Kavanaugh's attorney.

"These guys represented the same thing that arouses people when they see long hair or refer to 'hippies' and the whole youth culture," Amsterdam said. "These guys were not in their (the officers') mold, and that just burned them up. It's not a function of captivity or even of the military, it's a function of the way society looks at those who are different."

OFFICERS who served time in Plantation Gardens concede that at least some members of the Peace Committee were "honestly against the war," but they feel that their opposition was also motivated by selfishness.

All members of the Peace Committee — the men say that they never organized a formal group or gave themselves a name — were captured in South Vietnam in 1967 and 1968 and later were moved to North Vietnam. In addition to Kavanaugh, the group included two Marines — Sgt. Alfonso Ray Riate and Pvt. Frederick L. Elbert — and five Army men — Spec. 4 Michael P. Branch and Sgts. Robert P. Chenoweth, John A. Young, King D. Rayford and James A. Daly.

AFTER THE move to Plantation Gardens in the fall of 1970, the group at times included a dozen members who worked together on such projects as antiwar messages to Congress and a magazine they called New Life. Young, for instance, made more than a dozen radio broadcasts, and in one message to President Nixon said:

"I no longer want to fight for you or anyone like you . . . I can no longer support the killing of innocent Vietnamese men, women and children or the destruction of their beautiful country."

Each of the eight had entered the armed forces for different reasons, ranging from Rayford, who was drafted, to Young, who intended to make a career in the Green Berets.

BUT ALL of them were affected by their combat experiences.

One sergeant, who is part Indian, told his lawyer that he had been sickened by the sight of Marines "deliberately killing civilians." Chenoweth, who has been discharged, thought of himself as a "liberator" and was stunned to see the mutual hatred between the Americans and their Vietnamese allies.

Young remembers marching north after his capture.

"Until we got to the first camp, we didn't see a village intact, they were all destroyed," he said. "I sat down and put myself in the middle and asked myself Is this right or wrong? Is it right to destroy villages? Is it right to kill people en masse? After a while it just got to me."

These experiences were far different from those of many prisoners, particularly the pilots shot down over North Vietnam.

"A PILOT flies around and drops bombs," said Young, who is 27 years old and the father of two boys. "He doesn't ever see the war, he's not watching people get blown away, he doesn't even know what's happening."

Moreover, many prisoners were senior officers, 15 or 20 years older than the young enlisted men, dedicated to the military as a career and far less open to skepticism.

The Navy and Air Force pilots, who made up most of the prisoner population in North Vietnam, had received extensive survival training. They knew how to organize a communications system and from the earliest days set up a command structure. They decided to "resist" all forms of cooperation with their captors, and in the face of physical abuse maintained firm discipline in most cases.

THE ARMY and Marine foot soldiers had received little training. Many were kept for long periods in jungle camps where conditions were dreadful, and no command structure was ever established.

When Guy, and Air Force pilot, set up a chain of command at Plantation Gardens, many of the prisoners responded enthusiastically. To them, Guy was a hero, known by the code name "Moses," who displayed great courage and leadership in the face of frequent beatings by guards. But the Peace Committee members had become used to running their own show and resented the imposition of authority.

In addition, the committee's members cooperated with their captors out of fear of physical mistreatment. Asked why he did not "resist" the camp authorities, Chenoweth answered, "To do anything like that would be pretty stupid under the circumstances." He feels that many prisoners who were abused "brought it on themselves" by refusing to follow camp regulations.

GUY charged the eight dissidents with accepting "favors" from the camp authorities, and the men concede that they did receive small extra benefits, such as an occasional beer or candy bar. They insist, however, that they tried to refuse the gi gifts and were told they had "no right" to refuse.

The eight also maintained good relations with the guards and had more freedom to move around the camp than other prisoners. But that was because the dissidents treated the guards as "human beings" they said, while most prisoners called them "gooks" and "slopes" and considered them racially inferior.

Army records fire in 3rd day

ST. LOUIS, Mo. (UPI) — Tightly packed boxes of former servicemen's records fed a stubborn fire on the top floor of the giant U.S. Military Records Center for the third day Saturday.

Most sources conceded the flames probably destroyed almost all the Army's records on servicemen retired or discharged from 1912 to the early 1960s.

Nearly 100 firemen battled the blaze since it broke out early Thursday in the suburb of Overland. using aerial ladders because of oven-like temperatures inside, firemen contained the fire to the top floor.

The paper documents, however, consistently added fuel to the fire in the six-story building, which is the storage house for records of 56 million former members of all branches of the armed forces. The bulk of the records are originals without duplicates.

THE TOP FLOOR contained 22 million personnel records, many of them stacked in cardboard boxes on open shelves. Others were stored in metal cabinets.

"there's never been a building this big where you couldn't surround the fire and attack it," said Capt. Loren A. Hewitt of the University City Fire Department.

The building covers an area about 300 by 100 yards — the size of six football fields.

When the center was open in 1956 it was said to be second only to the Pentagon in terms of floor space.

a team of FBI agents was at the scene to determine whether arson was involved. Officials have reported about a dozen fires of suspicious origin at the center in the last two years.

The Defense Department reported that records of more than 300,000 persons released from the Army in the last three years were stored on the fire-damaged top floor, including records of some cases pending before the Army Discharge review Board.

Monitor 'found, lost'

By ROBERT R. SIDMAN

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — An underwater archaeological group believes it has found the Monitor, the ironclad warship which fought the Confederates' Merrimac to a stand-off in 1862.

The trouble is the divers' marker was destroyed and the ship has to be located again, there's a meddlesome sandstorm on the ocean floor and a way must be figured out to get the Monitor on top of the water instead of buried under it.

Underwater Archaeology Associates, Inc., a Richmond-based group which has recovered several Confederate blockade runners, says the Monitor is bout a mile off the eastern side of Hatteras Island, under 35 feet of water and probably at least 10 feet of sand.

THE NAVY carried the Monitor on its roll of ships until the 1950s, although no one had reported seeing the ironclad since it sank while being towed along the North Carolina coast on Dec. 31, 1862.

Then, in 1955, a Marine corporal stationed at Camp Lejeuns, N.C., reported he found the Monitor's turret protruding above the sand on the ocean floor.

Underwater Archaeology Associates began its own search for the Monitor in May after two years of research, working in cooperation with the USS Monitor Foundation of Washington, a group interested in the Union ship's history.

No one with the archaeology group has actually seen the ship, but a sonar device has recorded an image of a turret the group believes is part of the Monitor.

The archaeologists placed a buoy to mark the location, but another ship destroyed the buoy and now the search must begin again.

John Broadwater of Southport, N.C., an electronics specialist working with the archaeology group, said that if the sonar device locates the ship again, it will take at least a week for divers to reach the hulk.

HE SAID the ocean floor where the turret was sighted is very flat and very sandy and the current is often extremely strong. The result is a constant swirl of sand which reduces the divers' visibility to six inches or less, Broadwater said.

The underwater archaeologists say there is no known way to remove the piles of sand covering the ship and make sure it doesn't shift back onto the ship before it can be raised to the surface.

"You could work a couple of weeks cleaning it off and one good blow and it would be covered again," Broadwater said.

A spokesman for the group estimates it will cost $20,000 just to find the ship and pay the divers.

The Navy had no immediate answer when asked whether it would assist in recovering the ship and whether it would make any claims if the Monitor is recovered.

The archaeologists hope to display the ship in Norfolk, Va., the scene of the Monitor's first and only battle.

It was off Norfolk on March 9, 1862, that the Union's Monitor and the Confederates' Merrimac fought to a standstill in history's first fight between ironclad ships.

Nader aides ask curbs on chemical's use

WASHINGTON (AP) — Three Ralph Nader associates petitioned the Environmental Protection Agency Saturday to set limits for concentration in the air of a chemical which has contaminated cattle in Louisiana and been detected at low levels in meat products from 13 other states.

The chemical is hexachloro-benzene, known as HCB. It is used in agriculture, is a by-product of chemical production and has been connected with lover trouble and skin problems.

The Agriculture Department in May discovered 8,000 cattle near Geismar, La., with HCB levels in excess of the government guideline of 0.5 parts per million.

An EPA memorandum included with the petition reported finding the low-level residues on other states, with the highest residues occurring in cattle and lambs from California, Arizona, Louisiana and Texas.

An Agriculture Department memorandum identified the Geismar area as "a pocket of environmental contamination," from airborne particles.

Countdown for Skylab starting

CAPE KENNEDY (UPI) — The countdown for firing the next Skylab astronauts up to their space home for eight weeks was scheduled to begin today, almost two weeks before launch day.

Astronauts Alan L. Bean, Owen K. Garriott and Jack R. Lousma will be boosted up to the 86-ton orbiting space station July 28 in an Apollo command ship.

The space trio is expected to double the endurance record of the first Skylab crew and continue adding to man's knowledge about the earth, the sun and living in weightlessness for prolonged periods.

The countdown was scheduled to start earlier than for any previous spaceflight because it will include a dress rehearsal for launch, the countdown demonstration test, which before had always been done separately.

Many launch preparation chores normally repeated during the real countdown phase will be eliminated by the new schedule.

Bean, Garriott and Lousma's part in the dress rehearsal was eliminated by the new countdown plan. They usually practiced their launch day activities by donning spacesuits and climbing aboard the Apollo ferry ship just as they would do on launch day.

"It's always been a crew preference item," A NASA spokesman said. "The crew before has always wanted to go through a practice. This time they just feel it's an exercise they don't need."

Weed, bug pest 'Zapper' shown

COLLEGE STATION, Tex. (UPI) — Scientists Friday demonstrated a 16-ton machine which they say kills weeds and insect pests immediately with none of the harmful after effects of chemical poisons.

John Hughey, president of Oceanography International Corp. which developed the "Zapper" with Texas A&M University, said the machine slays weeds, fungi, nematodes and soil insects by applying microwaves directly to the soil at any depth up to two feet.

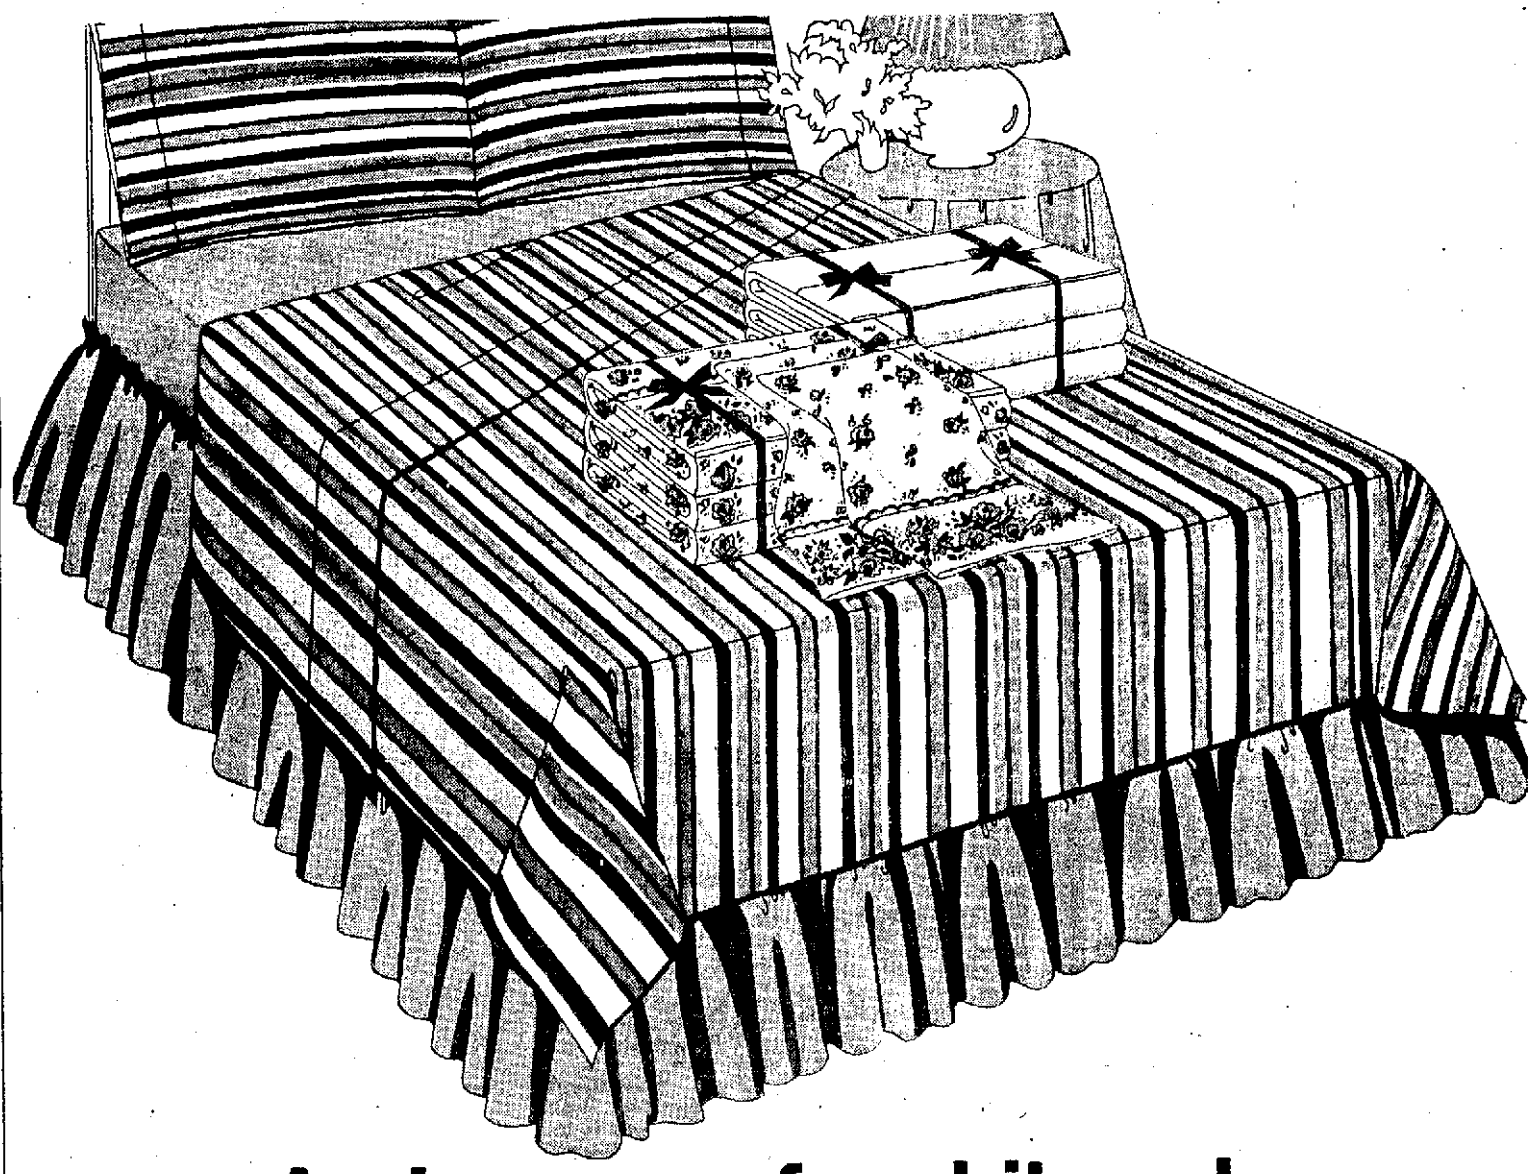

Treated soil is immediately ready for planting with no concern for toxic results.

The Zapper demonstrated Friday weighed 32,000 pounds, is 22 feet long, eight feet wide and nearly 10 feet high. It has a road speed of 10 miles per hour, but in the field moves at one-half to four miles an hour. It can treat up to 75 acres a day, Hughey said.

Later commercial models are expected to weigh 10 tons. Hughey said it hopes to build 1,020 of the machines during the next 10 years.

"We plan to offer a custom service for at least the next two years," he said. "Later, we hope to use a lease or license method of operation."

It was designed for use in fields where present costs of killing weeds and pests exceeds $15 an acre.

Russia encouraging U.S.-Cuba detente

By WILLIAM L. RYAN
AP Special Correspondent

As Fidel Castro prepares a big splash for the 20th anniversary of his revolution, there are hints that he is moving, perhaps reluctantly and under Moscow pressure, toward easing his hostility to the United States.

Cuba's Maximum Leader evidently is less than enchanted by the June Soviet-American summit and the continuing Moscow-Washington duet, and the July 26 celebration could provide him with an opportunity to display the look, at least, of a measure of independence.

However, the Kremlin has specific reasons for wanting the current trend of Communist-capitalist detente extended to include Prime Minister Castro's regime. Some movement toward relaxation in the fairly near future is a distinct possibility.

One sign has been the February Cuba-U.S. agreement to extradite or prosecute those who endanger crews and passengers in the seizure of planes or ships. Another has been Castro's recent insistence that he will refuse to negotiate under pressure, which can mean that he will negotiate — given a gesture from Washington — for example, the lifting of the economic embargo against Cuba.

'They must end the blockade first'

FIDEL, 20 years older, a good many pounds fatter and years more tired than the bearded young romantic who started Cuba on the road to communism, has chosen Santiago de Cuba for the locale of his celebration because it was in Santiago's Oriente Province that it all began on July 26, 1953.

It had seemed a wildly quixotic affair: a handful of rebels under a newly graduated law student storming the Moncada military barracks near Santiago.

The aim had been to spark a popular upheaval against the new government of Fulgencio Batista. As it turned out, the rebels got no help from the population and the gesture flopped. Fidel, just turning 27, was packed off to prison on the Isle of Pines, sentenced to 15 years.

If ever an amnesty was to haunt a reigning regime, it was that of 1955 in which Batista freed political prisoners. As soon as he got out, Fidel was off to Mexico to plot and organize and then to the United States to raise money for what would be called his "July 26 Movement."

On Dec. 2, 1956, Fidel and 80 other "rebeldes" landed from the yacht Granma in Oriente. Castro took to the Sierra Maestre hills to organize guerrilla war. It would last another two years while the Batista regime became steadily more repressive. Batista's downhill slide ended with his precipitate flight from Cuba on the last day of 1958.

Castro had promised that if his movement prevailed, Cuba's 1940 constitution would be the "supreme law of the land," with "absolute guarantees" of all the usual democratic freedoms. There would, he pledged, be general elections within a year. But there were no elections and the populace enjoyed none of the promised rights.

The image of Castro as ardent revolutionary reformer changed to the image of Castro as devoted follower of the Communist movement. With Americans all expelled, Soviet influence was quickly established.

Yet Castro never was entirely comfortable in the embrace of Moscow. Moscow had mistrusted him as a revolutionary, calling him a "putschist" and "adventurist," The orthodox Cuban Communist party took no part in the revolution and, in fact, had made its own deals with Batista.

Castro had no place to look for protection, however, except to Moscow, which was eager to establish the foothold.

Still, in the October, 1962 crisis, when Moscow bowed to a U.S. ultimatum to remove offensive missiles from Cuba, Castro let his anger show. On a number of occasions thereafter he displayed his impatience and annoyance with Moscow.

The Russians found that Fidel was more adept at conducting guerrilla war than organizing an economy, and Cuba became both irritating and costly for the Kremlin. By 1972, Soviet aid was at the rate of $750 million a year and steadily climbing.

In the 1972 and 1973 summits in Moscow and Washington between Soviet Communist chief Leonid I. Brezhnev and President Nixon, the Russians had a set of specific long-term and short-term aims. They had not wanted their goals to run into new cold war obstacles in the Western Hemisphere and thus for some time had propounded the theory that the times called for the nonviolent struggle for Communist power. Castro all along had been the prophet of violence for Latin America.

The Cuban leader visited the Soviet Union twice last year after the first Nixon-Brezhnev summit. Each time he was briefed by the topmost Soviet leaders on the aims of the current "peaceful coexistence" policy. He had no choice but to endorse the notion that Moscow was advancing the cause of world peace by taking steps to avoid nuclear confrontation.

IN MAY the journal U.S.A., organ of Moscow's Americanologists, carried an article entitled: "The United States and Cuba: Start of a New Dialogue?" It observed that the U.S. policy of isolating Cuba had led nowhere, but that cooperation could bring results.

When Chile's Marxist President Salvador Allende visited Havana late last year, Castro told him the issue of the U.S. naval base at Guantanamo was not of primary importance, but that hewas most interested in the future of Latin America and the U.S. economic blockade of Cuba.

"Some international press agencies took advantage of this statement to say that Cuba had softened its position," Castro commented later. "The reverse was true. Cuba had hardened its position. What we wanted to say was that for us the Guantanamo base was not fundamental, though that did not mean we ceased to demand its return . . . There cannot be improvement in relations between Cuba and the United States . . . while it continues to police therest of the continent . . . We have said very clearly regarding the blockade that . . . if they want a dialogue they must unconditionally end the blockage first."

AS A PROPAGANDA device to prepare Cuba's 8.5 million for things to come, a fictitious character called "Freddy" supposedly writes letters periodically from Florida to a Havana commentator. In one of these recently, "Freddy" wrote that the "magnificent" 26th of July celebration in Santiago would attract leaders from many countries, and this had caused panic among "the worms" - meaning Cuban exiles in the United States.

"By screaming or pleading, they accomplish nothing, and in the long run the United States will some time in the future hold talks or discuss problems with Cuba," wrote "Freddy."

Maybe that menas something. Maybe Castro, knowing the source of Cuba's guns and butter, is reluctantly getting ready to take Moscow's advice.

Lastiri president pro-tem

Army backs Peron takeover

BUENOS AIRES (UPI) — Provisional President Raul A. Lastiri won army backing Saturday for restoring Juan D. Peron, the former dictator, to the presidency of Argentina by constitutional means.

Lt. Gen. Jorge Carcagno, commander in chief of the army, issued to all army commands an order of the day to respect the transfer of power "as long as it always takes place within the limits of the national constitution."

The army's position was significant because the previous military junta had refused to allow Peron either to be a candidate in popular elections last March or to return to the country from 18 years in exile until the new constitutional government was inaugurated May 25.

Peron's personally designated presidential candidate, Hector J. Campora, led a Peronist sweep at the polls and then resigned Friday after 49 days in office to clear the way for Peron himself to be elected for the remainder of the four-year term.

The date under consideration for new elections is Sunday, Aug. 26, according to Peronist sources.

Lastiri's father-in-law, Jose Lopez Rega, who is Peron's private secretary, told newsmen that Peron's Justicialista Party would begin its campaign "the minute the doors are open to the political parties."

Lastiri pledged "immediate convocation" of new elections after accepting the blue and white sash of office Friday as the 34th president of the Argentine republic.

Jose Rucci, head of the five-million-member General Workers Confederation (CGT), declared Saturday, "We proclaim, here and now and indeclinable, the candidacy of Lt. Gen. Juan Peron for the presidency of all Argentines."

The CGT served as the power base during Peron's rule from 1946-1955 and continued to respond to his orders during his 18 years of exile.

Lastiri, who took office Friday night following the resignation of Campora, his cabinet and Vice President Vicente Solano Lima, must call new elections within 20 days to name Campora's successor. Peron, 77, is certain to win the new elections, and he indicated in an emotional address to the nation Friday night that he would be a candidate despite his age.

"If God gives me health and permits me, I must spend the last efforts of my life fulfilling my mission," Peron said.

Cambodia set for new attacks at Phnom Penh

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) — The Cambodian military high command placed all armed forces under a red alert Saturday to guard against any insurgent attacks on the city's outer defenses.

The measure required all military personnel to remain at their headquarters until further notice. Under the alert, all unemployed persons were ordered conscripted into the service, and all men between 18 and 36 were required to report for induction.

About 11 miles north of Phnom Penh U.S. F4 fighter-bombers and Cambodian gunners mistakenly killed or wounded about 10 villagers caught in a crossfire Saturday, field reporters said.

Prince Norodom Sihanouk's government in exile in Peking said its reply to Phnom Penh's proposals for a cease-fire and negotiations is "to attack the enemy resolutely until complete victory."

China's official Hsinhua news agency said three ministers of Sihanouk's government in exile appealed to Cambodian officers and men "to launch uprisings" against the government in Phnom Penh.

South Vietnamese military command reported that Communist - led forces battered government troops in the Saigon area with more than 100 rounds of rockets and mortars as fighting increased across the country.

Freedom delayed

SAIGON (UPI) — The Viet Cong charged Saturday that South Vietnamese gunners were shelling the area northeast of Saigon where they had promised to release two Canadian peace-keeping team officers missing for more than two weeks.

The scheduled repatriation Saturday morning was postponed until Sunday.

A spokesman for the Viet Cong's Provisional Revolutionary Government also expresses concern for the Canadians, who initially were reported in good health, saying they may have suffered from extensive moving on foot to various positions.

The two officers — Capts. Ian Patten, 31, of Toronto, and Fletcher Thomson, 25, of Ottawa — disappeared June 28 while on a fact-finding mission in the Viet Cong-controlled jungle area near Xuan Loc, 40 miles northeast of Saigon.

New A-arms

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Defense Department is considering the development of smaller and more accurate nuclear weapons to replace large-yield weapons deployed in Europe.

France puts off nuclear testing

PAPEETE, Tahiti (UPI) — France's controversial resumption of nuclear testing in the South Pacific appears to have been postponed and may not occur until sometime next week, officials in various countries of the area said Saturday.

The testing at the Mururoa Atoll, 720 miles southeast of Tahiti, had been expected to begin Saturday.

One clue to the postponement was the fact cited by Tahitian officials that the French helicopter-carrier ship Orage, which is assigned to the tests, has returned to Tahiti from the testing area. French naval Adm. Christian Claverie, in charge of the testing, also was away from his post celebrating Bastille Day with Tahitian Gov. Pierre Angeli on the island of Raiatea.

In Canberra, a spokesman for the Australian Department of Foreign Affairs said his government now regarded "as a distinct possibility that the test will be held sometime between Sunday and Wednesday."

A weather report in Papeete said clear skies that had prevailed in the test area as late as Friday night had begun to cloud over, raising the possibility of storms that could disrupt testing.

The resumption of the atmospheric testing has been protested by Australia, New Zealand and other areas of the South Pacific, as well as by some nations on the western coast of South America, because of the danger of nuclear fallout.

In Lima, Peru threatened to break off relations with France if the French explode nuclear test bombs in the South Pacific. In Mexico City, two small firebombs were thrown into the French Institute, and signs protesting the test were left outside the building. The bombs burned a telephone cable and caused minor damage in a ground floor office.

The International Court of Justice in the Hague has issued an injuction against the resumption of testing, but France announced that it would ignore the court order. France has insisted the tests are necessary for it's national defense.

2nd quake reported in India

NEW DELHI (UPI) — A "moderage" earthquake shook an area north of the subcontinent Saturday exactly six hours after a "light" intensity quake hit near the northern state of Kashmir, the Indian metereological office said.

The office said the epicenter of the second quake was about 675 miles north of New Delhi, either on the Tibet-China frontier or the Soviet-Afganistan border.

Bastille Day celebrated

PARIS (UPI) — Frenchmen jammed the streets of Paris throughout the night and day Saturday to celebrate the birth of the French revoluation 184 years ago.

The festivities — including street dancing, a military parade of 9,000 soldiers down the Champs Elysees and fireworks displays at night — marked the storming of the Bastille city prison on July 14, 1789.

The freeing of seven state prisoners from the jail was the first great victory of the working-class over King Louis XVI, who with his queen, Marie Antoinette, was subsequently guillotined in sight of their Louvre home.

The uprising spread from Paris to other major cities across the country, resulting in the beginnings of the democratic state.

Saturday morning, troops and students marched down the Champs Elysees followed by tanks, guns and missiles in a traditional parade.

Crack military regiments numbering 9,000 strong led the line from Napoleon's Arch of Triump down the mile-long sloping avenue to Cleopatra's Needle in the heart of the Place of the Concorde, the spot where the royal couple and scores of artistocrats were beheaded in the 18th century revolt.

Government offices were bedecked with the red, white and blue French tricolor, stores flew the flag and residents leaned out of apartment windows to watch the fesitivites.

Throughout the city, the sound of firecrackers broke the sound of singing voices. Radio stations played the original anthem of the revolution, "Le Chant du Depart," and the national song of today, "La Marseillaise."

The day was touched by tragedy when a firecracker exploded inside a car, killing a child, at the spot where the Bastille once stood — its outline now marked by a ring of cobblestones.

Live-in help

I recently was hired by the Los Angeles Police Department. In January 1972 Los Angeles passed an ordinance requiring all employes hired after that date to move into the city within one year. Do other cities have similar ordinances? Isn't it unconstitutional for my employer to dictate where I must live? C.S., Bellflower.

The California Supreme Court is expected to render a decision on this matter by the end of the year. Several cities have residency requirements. Virtually all of them will be affected by the court's decision. Silas Ector, a former Torrance librarian, sued that city in 1971 when he was fired because he had not moved to Torrance. A Superior Court decision upheld Torrance's ordinance, but California Appeals Court Judge Max Z. Wisot ruled that the residency requirement violated Ector's constitutional guarantee of freedom of travel. Torrance has filed an appeal with the California Supreme Court, and the case probably will be argued next month. In his decision, Wisot indicated that a residency ordinance may be appropriate for certain classes of employes, and he cited other cases where such a requirement was upheld for policemen and firemen. The California Supreme Court may rule on all residency requirements, or it may decide to exclude police and fire department personnel from consideration. Various police and firemen's associations have contributed money to finance Ector's appeal.

Release

In 1942 or 1943, I obtained a loan from the First Industrial Loan Co. in Los Angeles. I used my John Hancock life insurance policy as collateral. I paid off the loan and received my policy back, but I never got a release from the loan company. I've found out that this firm no longer is in business. I'm a senior citizen, and I would like to make sure that my insurance records are in order, but I don't know what to do about this missing release. Can ACTION LINE help? D.T., Long Beach.

Your insurance records still list the policy as being held by the loan company, but since you have your policy, the encumbrance probably can be removed, according to Jean Larocque of the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co. She explained that the loan company would not have returned the policy if the debt hadn't been paid. Send a copy of your policy to Miss Larocque, John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co., 615 W. Las Tunas Dr., Arcadia, Calif. 91006, and she will help you.

Nugget

I have some gold nuggets I would like to sell. Can you tell me who would buy them? Mrs. V.V., Lynwood.

If you have only a few nuggets to sell, your best bet is probably to try to sell them to a jewelry firm or hobbiest who will use them in jewelry settings rather than to commercial gold refiners. The cost of refining would cut too deeply into your profits and many of the refiners will not bother with only a few nuggets. Long Beach firms which occasionally buy gold nuggets are: C.C. Lewis Jewelry Co., 333 Pine Ave.; M & S Jewelry, 237 Long Beach Blvd.; and Jack Fay, jewelry designer, 116 E. Third St. Knott's Berry Farm also buys them at times. Ask to see Steve Knott there. You can find commercial gold refiners listed under gold and silver refiners and dealers in the Yellow Pages of the phone book.

Chris' craft

Parade Magazine recently printed a picture showing the cast of the movie "The Sound of Music" as they appear today and told what they are doing now. However, they didn't mention Christopher Plummer, a main character in the movie. Can you find out what he is doing now? J.L., Long Beach.

The 43-year-old Canadian-born actor "just closed in a play called "Cyrano" on Broadway after a 10-week-run," said Lillian Stein, an associate of Plummer's agent in New York City. "The New York critics gave him tremendous reviews," she said. Plummer, who "has done plays too numerous to mention and loads of movies," is probably best-known for his leading role in "The Sound of Music," she said. He makes his home in London.

tation of the pleura, the membrane which covers the chest wall.

In virtually all cases, it causes weakness and a general "lousy feeling." It can be caused by a number of viruses, usually contracted from another person.

Nixon's doctors still were trying to determine the type of virus afflicting him.

ZIEGLER SAID Nixon reduced his schedule, but was still making major decisions. He also said there was no need for Vice President Spiro T. Agnew to stand in for the President in ceremonial or other functions.

Nixon talked by telephone with his key foreign affairs adviser, Henry A. Kissinger, and received a 40-minute national security briefing from Gen. Alexander M. Haig, the White House chief of staff. Ziegler said the President also made several decisions about the Phase 4 economic plan to be announced shortly.

Mrs. Nixon, Julie and David Eisenhower visited the President in the afternoon, as they did Friday. They had no words for reporters standing nearby.

When the family emerged a little more than an hour later, Julie told a questioner that her father was "better" and David said Nixon was "coming along," but Mrs. Nixon studiously avoided any comment.

"She doesn't want to say anything," said Ziegler. "She's leaving that to the doctors."

2 drug agents facing action for gun play

New York Times Service

CHICAGO — The Federal Drug Enforcement Administration has called two of its narcotics agents to Washington for disciplinary measures following a traffic incident near here in which one irate agent reportedly drew his gun and pointed it at a truck that was delaying traffic.

Driving at a high speed, the agents reportedly pulled abreast of two trucks passing each other, making a row of three vehicles on a two-lane section of highway. The undercover narcotics agents, who were on the way to an assignment in an unmarked car, then forced one of the vehicles to the roadside where they seized the trucker driver's license.

"No matter what the provocation," said John R. Bartels Jr., acting head of the new anti-drug agency, "federal narcotics agents are charged with enforcement of federal narcotics laws and forays into unrelated areas are something we will not tolerate."

It was the latest incident to come to light of apparent abuse of power by some of the thousands of federal, state and local narcotics agents who are combating the nation's illicit drug dealers.

A recent New York Times investigation revealed that such narcotics agents have executed scores of mistaken, illegal, violent and sometimes fatal drug raids on innocent families across the country.

This week an Illinois man, John Meiners of downstate Edwardsville, filed a $1.4-million damage suit against federal narcotics agents, charging that on April 21 the agents broke in and ransacked his home, displayed no warrants, drank 11 cans of beer, stole stereo equipment, golf clubs, a shotgun and camera and then jailed Meiners for three days without charges.

Meiners' suit says the Office for Drug Abuse Law Enforcement (now merged with DEA) knew the agents "to be of a vicious propensity and . . . to have exceeded their authority in the past."

The raid, which failed to uncover any drugs, occurred two days before a pair of illegal raids in nearby Collinsville, Ill., involving some of the same agents.

This week the drug agency announced 30-day suspensions without pay for six agents and a supervisor who were involved in the Collinsville raids against the homes of Herbert Giglotto and Donald Askew. Both raided families have sued.

Administration worried; consumers like freeze

John T. Dunlop to quip, "It is about time the people as producers meet the people as consumers."

In his own consultations on planning for Phase 4 Dunlop said most businessmen, farmers and labor leaders want a quick end to the freeze, while consumer groups and the media consider it a "glorious idea and want to see it continue indefinitely."

Herbert Stein, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, has said public opinion, including demands in Congress, was a major factor in the administration's decision to impose the price freeze against the recommendation of most advisers.

Stein and other economists have maintained that controls and price freezes distort the economy in the long run by reducing the profit incentive for production.

The ultimate result, they say, will be shortages.

But Ms. Ryan (a designation she prefers) said in an interview that during her survey of consumer opinion for Phase 4, she found a "lot of consumer support" for accepting some shortages if they are required to assure lower prices.

Some consumer group leaders have been contemplating rationing as a short-term solution to the problem, but their argument is largely "a question of emphasis," she said.

She said consumer leaders pointed out that high prices are particularly difficult for low-income elderly and the poor, who have "nutritional problems to start with."

Stein said that one economist has seriously suggested that a permanent, comprehensive and rigid controls program would require about 250,000 employes. The present employment of the Cost of Living Council is about 800, with help from about 3,000 agents of the Internal Revenue Service.

The hope that controls could be ended entirely this year was recently expressed by the administration's influential Labor-Management Advisory Committee, made up of some of the country's top labor and corporate leaders.

Shultz and Dunlop both have said in recent days that it is possible that controls could be ended this year. But Stein has said that the ultimate decision on ending controls rests with the American people.

Stone denies asking contributions probe

CHICAGO (AP) — W. Clement Stone denied on Saturday a report that he had asked special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox to trace the uses of his multimillion-dollar contributions to President Nixon's election campaigns.

Stone, a millionaire Chicago insurance executive and philanthropist, revealed Friday that he had given nearly $7 million in loans and contributions to Republican campaigns since 1968.

Almost $5 million of that total was given in support of Nixon's 1968 and 1972 presidential races.

falsified reports," the former major said. "Lavelle never found out that they had been doing exactly the same thing before he got there — only on a bigger scale — but they got away with it."

Knight said that the falsified bombing and reporting stopped with the invasion of Cambodia in May, 1970. He said that most of the illegal raids were concentrated in the Fish Hook section of Cambodia near the South Vietnamese border, an areas widely considered by American military men to be a staging area or sanctuary for Viet Cong units and supplies.

"It was thoroughly justified bombing," the former officer said, "and that's why I argued and argued with these people. I said we got to do it legally, and they'd say, 'No — Senator Fulbright might find out about it."

In a declassified summary of air operations provided earlier this year to Hughes, the Air Force did not list and B52 strikes into Cambodia until May, 1970.

Knight confirmed that he had been requested to testify Monday before the committee and said that he was ready to provide the names and addresses of other former Strategic Air Command officers who would be willing to testify. "We were all SAC," Knight said. "If somebody could have punched the right number into the right spot, they could have had us bombing China if they wanted to."

last week conducted a telephone survey of the heads of scores of major corporations. The survey disclosed that the standard Stans-Kalmbach request among business leaders was for $100,000 in individual executive contributions — contributions that would be legal.

Last week, American Airlines, which had a proposed merger with Western Airlines pending before the government, admitted that it had given the Nixon campaign an illegal corporate donation of $55,000 after, it said, Kalmbach had requested $100,000. The merger was later rejected.

In the wake of American's admission, the New York Times conducted its survey. The survey disclosed that the Stans-Kalmbach requests were customarily for $100,000, but sometimes the request was for 1 per cent of the executives' combined net worth, a figure that could have been higher than $100,000.

The Times' list of companies that the two men were said to have visited — a sample of about 100 corporations — indicated that they had solicited most, if not all of the prime defense contractors. The list also indicated that they had called on other companies in trouble with or awaiting rulings from government agencies and boards controlled by the administration.

American Airlines said its illegal gift had been made "in fear of what would happen if it were not given."

Many of Stans' and Kalmbach's corporate hosts said they had been invited to use a loophole in the federal law, since closed, that allowed them to avoid public disclosure of their contributions.

Fred L. Hartley, president of the Union Oil Company, said, for example, that Stans and Leonard K. Firestone, the chief Nixon fund-raiser in California, had requested $100,000 from him during a call at his office in February 1972.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Special prosecutor Archibald Cox officially expanded his Watergate investigation Saturday by appointing two men to pursue related inquiries into 1972 election campaign "dirty tricks" and the White House security squad known as the "plumbers."

Hartley, whose company was involved in the notable oil spill crisis in 1969 in the Santa Barbara Channel, said this week that he had declined the request "of such great magnitude" on his personal fortune and that he had told his callers he would make public disclosure of his contributions, if any.

Hartley also recalled that he had felt obliged to remind his visitors that it was "illegal for a corporation to give a campaign contribution in a federal election." He later gave $3,000, duly reported. He has since tried and failed to get it back.

'Third Vietnam,' money shortage threaten Thieu

Editor's Note: The fighting has died down in Vietnam, but tremendous problems remain for the government of South Vietnam's President Thieu. The following is a look at Vietnam now by Pulitzer Prize-winner Peter Arnett, who covered the Indochina war for more than a decade and returned recently for this report.

By PETER ARNETT
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON — Profound, decisive changes are transforming South Vietnam as the American presence dwindles to nearly nothing and the cease-fire agreements stagnate. The question now is, can the anti-Communist South Vietnamese government, propped up by the United States for nearly 20 years, survive the following problems:

— A "Third Vietnam" of interconnecting highways and embryonic towns is being constructed by the Communists in the high ground and valleys that stretch 600 miles inside South Vietnam from the 17th parallel border in the North to the Seven Mountains near the Gulf of Thailand in the South.

— Without American air power South Vietnamese field commanders cannot successfully wage renewed full-scale war. After Aug. 15 President Nixon must have the approval of Congress to recommit U.S. bombers to Indochina — a greater barrier than any other during the 10-year American participation in the war.

— A dollar shortage might accomplish what a decade of Communist bullets failed to do. The government is nearly bankrupt because free-spending American GIs have gone home, and expected foreign investment and economic development have failed to materialize. Officials in Saigon are nervously watching the U.S. Congress and its aid deliberations.

The government under President Nguyen Van Thieu has these things going for it:

— Thieu stands firm and resolute in Saigon in absolute command of his armed forces and his government, and giving only minimum, reluctant recognition to the Communist side and the cease-fire accord.

— He has control over 95 per cent of the population by day, and is solidifying his political future by forming his own "Democratic party," and by using the comparatively well-skilled and numerous revolutionary development cadre to advance the fortunes of his party in the villages.

— The government still hopes the United States can pressure the big Communist powers to reduce support for North Vietnam.

ANALYSIS

But experienced American and Vietnamese observers in South Vietnam, in evaluating the ramifications of the big changes in the Indochina picture this year, have come to the conclusion that the military and political scales have been tipped at this point against the government.

They feel that from a historical viewpoint, the 30-year-long Vietnamese Communist revolution to dominate the whole of Vietnam, fought first against a generation of French troops, and then against the Americans, seems to have entered its terminal stage.

"Anti-Communist Vietnam today is like ice in a river," commented one American who has served in this country for a decade. "You can walk across the ice right now, you can spin stones across it, but the river underneath is flowing swiftly and melting the ice."

The "Third Vietnam" was visible to this reporter in a six-week tour of South Vietnam that ranged from watching a lavish military parade winding past flapping flags in Saigon, to cringing in a ditch under a Communist artillery barrage in Kontum Province.

White-flannelled tennis players were competing in the "Northern Provinces Invitation Meet" at the old French Cercle Sportif in Hue. But just 40 miles up Route One opposite the ruins of Quang Tri City on the banks of the Thach Han River sat a tent-city forward command post of the Provisional Revolutionary Government, formerly the National Liberation Front and the Viet Cong.

In 10 years of covering the Vietnam war the only Viet Cong I had seen were either dead ones, prisoners or tiny figures in the distance trying to flee from American helicopter gunships.

At Quang Tri today they swim and wash in the muddy waters of the river under their flag, a yellow star on a red-and-blue background flying from a high flagpole. South Vietnamese soldiers watch stolidly from the other side.

The "Third Vietnam" is visible elsewhere. Newsmen have flown to Loc Ninh, once an important rubber center north of Saigon but now a possible capital for the Communist side's government. Other newsmen have made surreptitious visits to Viet Cong-controlled parts of the Mekong Delta and the central coast.

And members of the four-nation International Commission for Control and Supervision have told of being served chilled Bulgarian white wines in the old U.S. Special Forces camps of Ben Het and Duc Co in the central highlands. They are now outposts for the "Third Vietnam."

But only a tiny part of this new country shows, in keeping with the clandestine nature of Vietnamese communism. The big guns that dominate Hue and the ruins of Quang Tri, and Kontum, are not visible to the naked eye. The tanks, too, are well hidden.

Visible to the spy-camera's eye are the lengthened air strips at Khe Sanh and Ashau, stripes that, like a dozen others now in Communist territory, were laid down by American Seabees in other days.

Khe Sanh has something the Seabees never put in: rows of SAMs, surface-to-air missiles installed to counter any new bombing campaign. Highways are sprouting around mountain sides and across interior rivers like jungle creeper in a hothouse.

The intention seems to be to link up all parts of the "Third Vietnam," from the 17th parallel, where the old North and South Vietnam border used to be, south to the Ashau valley, Dak To and Kontum, across to Binh Dinh Province on the coast, and down to Loc Ninh and Tay Ninh northwest of Saigon.

The system will be an alternative to the Ho Chi Minh trail that lies opposite on the western side of the Annamite Mountain chain. When it's wet on one side of the Annamites, it's dry on the other. Intelligence reports indicate the last segment of the north-central section is going into place, enabling Communist trucks to drive inside South Vietnam from the 17th parallel to the environs of Kontum City.

TOWNS ARE GOING up around Khe Sanh, Ashau, and other places. They are apparently being populated initially by resettling the families of some of the North Vietnamese soldiers who have been fighting in the south for ages, mountain tribesmen, and the more than 20,000 people from Quang Tri who were captured in the military offensive last year and taken into North Vietnam. Several thousands are apparently back in the old U.S. Marine base at Dong Ha.

The birth of the "Third Vietnam" this year is part of the swift current undermining the Saigon government. Already, an estimated one quarter of the territory of South Vietnam has melted away under another flag.

President Thieu refuses to admit he has lost any

'Ideological struggle' unchanged

Soviets 'clarify' detente

By JAMES R. PEIPERT
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union seems concerned that detente with the United States may be misunderstood at home and around the world.

To correct any misunderstandings, top leaders and the controlled media have begun a major effort over the past few days to explain the closer U.S.-Soviet relationship following the June summit in America.

ANALYSIS

Two messages stand out in the flood of articles and speeches:

— Soviet citizens and Western optimists should not think the "ideological struggle" will slacken, allowing a freer flow of people and ideas between the capitalist and socialist camps.

— THE interests of allies such as Egypt and North Vietnam will not be sold out in any collusion between the two superpowers.

Politburo member Mikhail S. Suslov, the top Soviet ideologue, delivered on Friday the most definitive statement on detente and the "ideological struggle."

"There can be no peaceful coexistance between socialism and capitalism" in the idological sphere, Suslov told a gathering of the party elite. "Class enemies still try to take every opportunity to drag into the socialist countries reactionary bourgeois ideology which is alien to them."

Suslov urged "constant vigilance and readiness to deal a rebuff to all intrigues by aggressive, reactionary circles of imperialism and to any hostile ideological subversions."

HE ADDED that the Communist party's striving to mold "a new man" must "take place in an uncompromising, implacable struggle against bourgeois ideology."

A Tass commentary the same day declared that cooperation between "states with different social systems" does not mean they can interfere in each other's internal affairs.

This is an "undebatable question," the government

'Third Vietnam' threatens Thieu

territory. But after some abortive military efforts recently to open roads, his government now has to face the inescapable fact that without American air support its troops are not strong enough to win back any of that territory.

With American bombing soon to end for good unless Congress allows the President to renew it, Saigon has to face the possibility of having more territory bitten off in Communist military offensives. Kontum hangs only by a thread. Land is being lost in the Mekong Delta.

The government already faces a formidable land squeeze, and is finding it has too many people on its hands. This is an ironic twist because in the counterinsurgency phase of the war the control of population was considered to be paramount. Whole districts were forcibly resettled near the cities to deny the Communists recruits and labor.

Now in Tay Ninh Province, for instance, 400,000 people occupy a narrow strip of land and can't move out because the Communists control three-quarters of the province. In Pleiku and Kontum provinces Montagnard families have started drifting into Communist territory because they are tired of the refugee camps.

NOW OPERATING within striking distance of the population from almost one end of the country to the other, the Communist side has started recruiting guerrilla fighters again and has propaganda teams moving. The fluid lines between the Communist "leopard spots" in the populated regions and the government side are an advantage for the Communists who are adept at infiltration.

The Communist side has built up an enormous arsenal of weapons and equipment in the "Third Vietnam," and Saigon's field commanders are haunted by the idea of yet another enemy offensive.

Col. Vo Toan, a regimental commander of South Vietnam's 1st Division, told this reporter that if a major Communist offensive began he would be pushed away from the western approaches of Hue and into the city in 48 hours if the United States did not send in "B52s, and I want everything else, F4s, A4s, the whole lot." The Vietnamese air force was just "too little and too light," Col. Toan said.

And a future offensive might have some subtle differences that could seriously hinder rescue attempts by President Nixon. First of all, it would be launched from the "Third Vietnam" that is already recognized by 33 nations as different and distinct from North Vietnam.

Even though an estimated 145,000 North Vietnamese troops remained in the South after the January cease-fire agreement, the difference between them and the Viet Cong is blurring. The north's troops and the Viet Cong are becoming troops of the People's Revolutionary Government. The NVA flags are down, the PRG flags are up.

Opposing the Saigon government then in any future Communist offensive will not be a foreign power called "North Vietnm" but a "Third Vietnam" already recognized by 33 nations, that is taking on the trappings of a competing political organization. By this sleight-of-hand the conflict can be localized like the Biafran war or Bangladesh, meaning that a Saigon bid for internation help could easily fail.

THIEU ALSO FACES an economic crisis. The cascading American money that made of Saigon a financial Niagra Falls is done to small-stream size these days.

Much of the 1960s boom money came from free-spending U.S. GIs who pured a half-billion dollars into the economy each year. Now, local American spending is down to around $100 million each year and the prosperity bubble has burst.

Just as South Vietnam was first totally reliant on U.S. troops for survival, and then U.S. bombers, it remains totally dependent on U.S. aid money.

Senior Saigon officials have been expressing concern about getting enough U.S. money this year — more than $600 million is needed. The funds probably will be forthcoming in direct cash grants and commodity programs.

The problem for Saigon is that South Vietman probably will remain impoverished forever unless the war really stops. The great hope there was that January's cease-fire agreement would bring in a deluge of foreign investment. But neither peace nor investments have come.

South Vietman has very little to fall back on, around $160 million in foreign reserves that would be eaten up quickly if U.S. aid was held up. The grim alternatives facing Saigon are more currency devaluations and more import controls, meaning less goods on the market and more hardships for the people living under government control.

There are hopes. Foreign companies are interested in offshore oil exploration, but a return in that area, if any, is several years away.

How do the cease-fire engreements of January and June fit into the future mosaic of Vietnam? They have not ended the fighting, and there is stagnation in every other area — release of political prisoners, negotiations for free elections, delineation of zones of control, and so on. The signs indicate that there is no hpe at all of honoring the cease-fire accords. A substitute nation has stillnot been found for Canada which, in frustration, is leaving the ICCs.

Russ secrecy hurts better ties with U.S.

By GORON F. JOSELOFF

MOSCOW (UPI)—The Soviet mania for secrecy is clouding otherwise bright prospects for further improvement of relations with the United States.

Unless the Kremlin is more forthcoming with information, Soviet-American trade as well as space cooperation could be affected.

ANALYSIS

The problem is the Soviets never before have had to tell what they did not want told. There was no reason to do so. Now there is.

American bankers and businessmen have been in the vanguard of those seeking to learn some of the Kremlin's secrets.

"The information given out about the Soviet economy is very much less than that given out by other countries," said David Rockefeller, chairman of the Chase Manhattan Bank, on a recent Moscow visit.

"Unless they are prepared over time to give more, very large credits would be difficult to obtain."

Rockefeller's words echoed those of a few weeks earlier from Henry Kearns, chairman of the U.S. Export-Import Bank.

"We have not had as much information from the Soviet Union as we normally require to grant large credits," he said at the end of a Moscow visit.

Some American businessmen have been willing to make concessions to Soviet secrecy in their eagerness to do business here. But the concessions may not continue indefinitely.

The Soviet space program, long shrouded in secrecy because of its military potential, is an especially sensitive area and thus a special problem.

Dr. Philip Handler, president of the U.S. National Academy of Sciences, told Soviet scientists recently they must soon explain recent Soviet space failures to insure that the planned U.S.-Soviet space mission proceeds on schedule.

Western monitors have detected at least four major Soviet space failures in the past two months. The failures raised doubts among American scientists about the Soviets' ability to carry out their half of the joint space project, in which a two-man Soyuz craft and a three-man Apollo ship are scheduled to link up in space in the summer of 1975.

Handler said he told Mstislav Kelydsch, president of the Soviet Academy of Sciences, that "there will come a time before we do the formal linkup when we are going to have to have more definitive information than we have been provided as to the current status of your program."

The Soviets have not admitted failures, and it would be greatly embarrassing to concede privately to American scientists what has been denied publicly.

agency said. "In principle, there are not, and cannot be, two ways about it."

Tass made the remark in a sharp attack on Radio Liberty and Radio Free Europe, American-funded stations that broadcast to the Soviet Union and its Eastern European satellites.

Tass said support for the "radio saboteurs" is interference in internal affairs and is "by no means the best way to establish mutual understanding between capitalist and socialist countries."

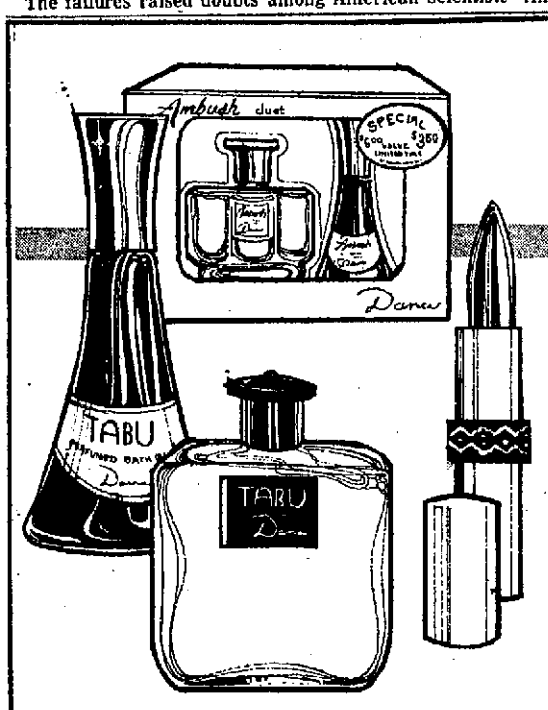

THE SOVIET Union is hostile to the stations because they break the monopoly of information the regime maintains over its citizens. Suslov and Tass made clear the regime intends to hang on to that monopoly.

Equally strenous efforts have been made over the past few days to assure troubled allies of continued Soviet support in the wake of the latest Soviet-American summit.

Premier Alexei N. Kosygin told a top-level North Vietnamese delegation Friday that in negotiations with the Americans "we never waived our class principles or the interests of revolutionary forces struggling for national and social liberation."

Premier Pham Van Dong and Communist party chief Le Duan may go back to Hanoi, however, wondering just where they do stand.

SOVIET party chief Leonid I. Brezhnev told them a few days earlier that "revolutions are not to be exported," presumably to such trouble spots as Cambodia.

Charles T. Manatt, southern chairman, and Herman Sillas Jr., southern secretary of the California Democratic Party will speak at the Friday noon luncheon meeting of the Third Friday Forum in the Lakewood Country Club.

Manatt, who was state chairman of the party for 1971-72 and California chairman for the McGovern-Shriver presidential campaign, is expected to resign the southern chairmanship soon to take over direction of the 1974 gubernatorial campaign of Assembly Speaker Bob Moretti, D-North Hollywood.

Sillas, a 1970 candidate for state controller, is considered to be a certain 1974 candidate for secretary of state. Sillas is senior partner in a Los Angeles law firm and a political sceince instructor at El Camino Junimr College.

Bond to attend tax conference

Assemblyman Bill Bond, R-Long Beach, will go to Washington, D.C. today to attend a national tax conference and to review reapportionment systems in the East.

Bond and Assemblyman Raymond Gonzales, D-Bakersfield, were chosen to represent the state Assembly at the conference.

Bond, at hss own expense, also will meet with government officials in Michigan, New Jersey, Canada and with the Ford Foundation in New York. He said each of the citied governments has vested authority for reapportionment in bodies that are independent of the legislature.

The Long Beach Assemblyman said he intends to research the experience of these jurisdictions so that he can include it in his own project to remove the authority for reapportionment from the California Legislature and place it in the hands of an independent commission in time for the 1980 redistricting.

Kennick vs. sales tax

State Sen. Joseph M. Kennick, D-Long Beach, said Saturday the number one goal of the Legislature and the governor should be to rescind the one-cent increase in the sales tax.

Kennick said he is prepared to vote for either a strict six-months sales tax delay as is advocated by Governor Reagan or a broader version as favored by Assembly Speaker Bob Moretti that would include a rebate of up to $200 on 1973 state income taxes.

The Senator also pledged to vote to override the governor's veto of Senate Bill 425, the measure that would have deferred for six months the one-cent sales tax increase and provided a rebate on 1973 income taxes.

SEC seen 'destroying Westgate'

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — C. Arnholt Smith, board chairman of Westgate-Californ Corp., says his removal as head of the conglomerate will result in its destruction.

The contention was advanced in a 25-page affidavit Smith filed in U.S. District Court Friday. He denied Securities and Exchange Commission charges of conspiracy to defraud stockholders of Westgate-California and the U.S. National Bank.

The affidavit opposed the SEC civil action's petition that a receiver be named for the firm and that Smith and Westgate-California President Philip A. Toft be removed.

But flogging's rare

Eton — little is new since 1440

By HUGH A MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

ETON, England (AP) — Under these ancient yews, within sight of Windsor Castle, it does seem a bit much asking a 15-year-old Greek scholar in white tie and tails what's new at Eton these days.

"New, sir?" He considered the impertinence. "I do believe the college beagles are having a go after us."

Give or take half a millenium, the royal school that Henry VI founded in 1440 to combat heresy and pray for the repose of his soul doesn't change all that much.

True, there's closed circuit TV in the classrooms now, a computer in the math department and all sorts of gadgetry in the language lab, but the old oaken desks where Gladstone carved his initials and Shelley hid his cat's skull for raising ghosts seem locked in the timeless tranquility that shall forever be Eton.

Except, of course, when the classics master has to raise his voice to a bellow every two minutes to give Aristophanes the decibel advantage over jumbo jets screaming out of nearby London Heathrow Airport.

And the only heresy about these days worth combatting is a student underground movement to admit girls, but even that seems as far off as a merger with Luton Comprehensive school.

FROM THE playing fields along the Thames echo still the hollow thwack of the cricket bat and the muffled cries of future prime ministers wounded in "The Field Game," Eton's own version of manslaughter with a scoreboard.

But, alas, only rarely anymore does the head master's study resound with the dreaded swish of the birch on elegantly pinstriped bottoms.

Head Master Michael McCrum, an ex-Navy man, is not sold on the efficacy of caning to quell mutiny among his 1,200 charges.

His restraint at the breach represents a progression, or at least a digression, from the legendary John Keate, a 19th Century head master who once flogged 80 boys at a kneeling.

Even George III, the most beloved local royal highness ever to wandar over the bridge from Windsor, might have regretted the decline of "six of the best" from the master. His standard greeting to the boys, who still celebrate his birthday, June 4, as Eton's greatest holiday, was: "Well, well, my boy, when were you last flogged, eh?"

"There is less flogging in our great schools," Dr. Johnson told biographer Boswell who was about to enroll his first born at Eton. "But then less is learned there, so what the boys get at one end they lose at the other."

MCCRUM, A classic major from Cambridge, thinks today's Etonians work a good deal harder than their frequently flogged 18th Century counterparts, who seem to have spent more time poaching the king's rabbits in Windsor Great Park than in running down Greek irregular verbs.

Since the advent of nationwide examinations in 1957, Eton, Harrow, Rugby, Winchester and the other great independent or private schooos — called "public" in Britain for reasons obscured by tradition — have had to accentuate the academic to keep apace with some of the better equipped, state-supported comprehensive schools.

Aside from maintaining its eminence as "the moter and mistress of all grammar schools," Eton's problems today, as summarized by its 47-year-old head master in an interview, center mostly on image and money.

McCrum regrets that the world out there beyond the Long Walk still sees Eton as a bastion of privilege, wealth, elitism and stuffy traditionalsism. The King's College of Our Lady Beside Windsor, to give its full name, tries to forget it was once famous for flogging, fagging and formal attire.

Fagging, slowly dying out, is the tradition by which new boys in the lower school put in time as personal servants to graduating seniors.

IN OLDEN DAYS, when future novelist Henry Fielding ran off in tears to his grandmother, 13-year-olds made the beds, laid the fires and mulled the ale for their 18-year-old masters. Loner Percy B. Shelley openly rebelled against being anyone's valet and moodily walked the nearby churchyard where old Etonian Thomas Gray wrote his elegy.

Under fire now from a growing segment of undergraduates and outlawed in several of Eton's 25 houses, fagging survives mainly in the form of running errands and doing the shopping for older boys.

"New masters coming here always find us less stuffy and exclusive than they had expected," McCrum remarked as the noon bell on Lupton Tower released hordes of Etonians from the formal morning wear to the acceptable afternoon attire of brushed denims and flowery mod shirts. "The uniform is conspicuously idiotic, but it does have its practical side. It lasts for years. The tails are quite long at the start, but go up as the boy grows up. The longer they wear them, the more they love them."

Henry VI founded Eton for "70 poor scholars" to be housed at the college and trained at the king's expense. He also provided for fee-paying boys to come from other parts of the kingdom.

There are still 70 King's Scholars, called "collegers" and entitled to wear a gown over their formal wear, who come to Eton virtually fee-free through a nationwide competitive examination. Another 1,150 "Oppidans" (Latin: town dwellers) occupy the 25 Eton houses that up until World War II were actual boarding houses. Many of these are enrolled with their house masters at birth.

ALTHOUGH one quarter of the boys now receive some kind of scholarship help, Eton's network of illustrious old boys stretching back through the ages sustains its elitist image. Eighteen of the 45 prime ministers since Walpole went to Eton, as did such diverse luminaries as Algernon Swinburne, Sir Robert Boyle, John Maynard Keynes, George Orwell, Cyril Connolly and Randolph Churchill. A survey a few years back turned up 71 old Etonians in the House of Commons, and two thirds of the dukes and 55 per cent of the rest of the nobility. Parents Day still produces a representative sampling from Burke's peerage.

Eton's money problems are those of independent schools everywhere, especially in America. Rising labor costs recently brought about a 15 per cent increase in basic annual fees to 990 pounds (U.S. $2,475), almost double what they were a decade ago. Next year, to cope with the shortage of kitchen help, six Eton houses will serve meals cafeteria-style from a central dining hall. If the experiment works, others will join the plan, thus doing away with the cherished intimacy of an Eton house where 45 boys live together under a house master.

McCrum has no fear that Eton will price itself out of existence. More parents than ever send their children to private schools in Britain, more than 100,000 now compared with half that many at the end of World War II.

Although Winchester, founded in 1387, is older, Eton is unique in that every boy has his own room and does a good deal of his work under the tutor system, where boys call at the master's home for what has been called "private business" since Tudor times. Eton's masters, one for every 10 students, live within a mile of the campus and reputedly are the best secondary school staff in the world.

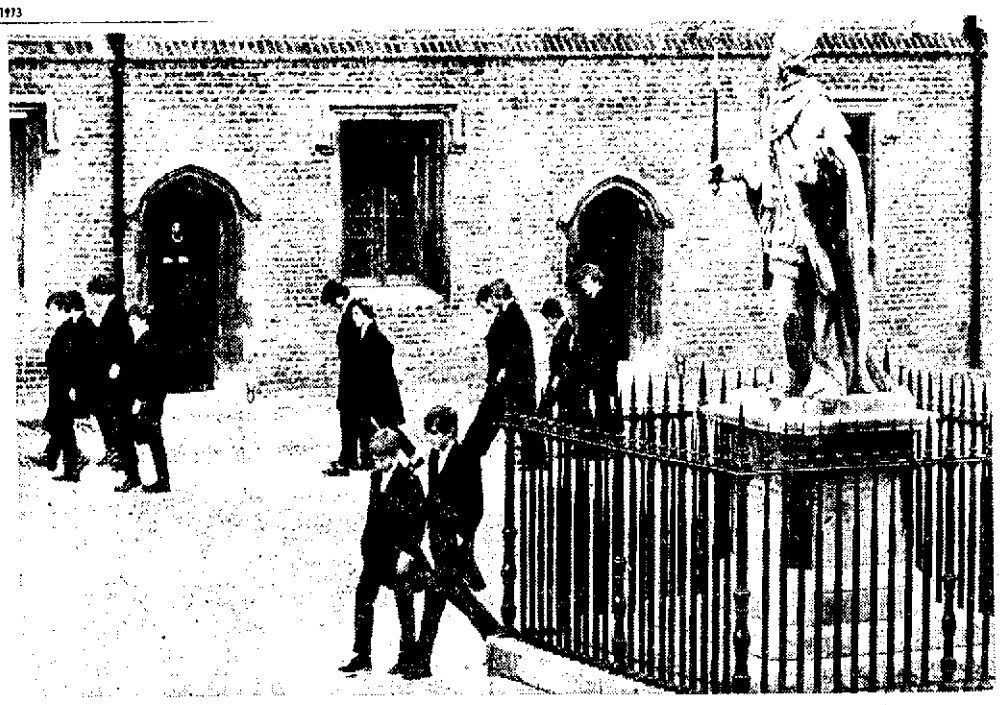

For every 30 places at Eton, 180 prospective students are interviewed from a list of 300 or more.

THE BOYS' bulletin board may advertise guitars for sale and "genuine autographed Cat Steven's album," but change comes slowly, imperceptibly to the world of Henry VI's "living stones," as he called his "college of sad priests." The "wall game," an organized riot, is stillplayed every St. Andrews Day, Nov. 30, even though no one has scored a goal since 1909. Anti-public school that is part of the Eton tradition."

The only recent flogging scandal involved boys flogging the family heirlooms at antique shops downtown to raise pin money for "sock," the time-hallowed tea time eating orgy among the rooms. The head master had to call on local dealers not to buy thw family silverplate from enterprising hucksters.

The going "poena," written punishment, hthese days for smoking without permission of the house master is to copy out several chapters from the government report on the effects of smoking and drug taking.

In such dark hours, young Etonians can find solace of some sort in the school's history. In Restoration days students were required to smoke, under penalty of flogging, as an antidote to the plague.

Parliaments, pollution, popcorn

South Seas islands go modern

By MORT ROSENBLUM
Associated Press Writer

SUVA, Fiji — Bali Ha'i still drifts in and out of the mists, but it has underground telephone cables now. Paradise has parliaments, passports, pollution and popcorn.

The neighborhood airline here flies to an independent state, a protectorate, a condominium, a colony, a dominion, a territory, a kingdom and a republic.

They are all part of the enormous chunk of ocean below Hawaii known vaguely to most as the South Seas.

Modern travelers still find the islands as grass skirty and alluring as Captain Cook's crewmen first described them. But there have been a few changes.

DOWNTOWN SUVA bristles with banks and stoplights. In Melanesia, Stone Age tribesmen are naked but for genital wrappers and Japanese wrist watches. Modern times have touched every reef and rockpile.

Nauru, for example, is a barren eight-square-mile island with a few thousand native inhabitants stuck off by itself where even Robinson Crusoe wouldn't want it.

Today the highways of Nauru are littered with abandoned Cadillacs. It's an independent country with a shipping fleet, a long-distance airline and rich investments.

Four-fifths of Nauru is phosphate, and Nauruans are digging up and selling their island. Each citizen gets a cut. And when the phosphate is gone in a few decades, President Hammer DeRoburt jokes to friends, they're all going up in a rocket.

IN NAURU, Fiji, Tonga and Western Samoa, sovereign governments run their own affairs.

Now Pacific premiers meet regularly to relax in colorful island shirts and discuss migration and banana prices. Sometimes they get together on a pleasant, but pointed, nasty note to a former mother country.

Although a half-dozen foreign countries, linger in 14 island groups, in one governing role or another, there has been a break from centuries of domination.

Almost before Cook had finished the cocktail circuit in 18th century England, shiploads of missionaries, pirates, whalers, traders and slavers were on their way from all over Europe.

Europeans at first were just casual callers — and sometimes they were dinner. Later, when their numbers increased, they took over.

"Balckbirders" collecting slaves sometimes won over recalcitrants by dropping off someone suffering from measles, a previously unknown disease which could decimate an island in weeks.

Gunpowder merchants improved canoe warfare so that people started getting killed. Missionaries covered bare breasts with cloth that got wet and caused pneumonia.

BY WORLD WAR I, the 12 million square miles of the middle and South Pacific were carved up and distributed to Europe and the United States.

Local populations were smaller than when explorers first found them, but flourishing communities were speaking fluent French, English and German, shipping off coconuts and buying canned peaches.

With the global wars, everything changed. Japan had won and lost Micronesia. Germany was out. Islanders who fought for France and Britain came home wanting independence.

Gentle island ways took on hard commercial edges, and many thatched roofs gave way to tin and boards. Captain Bligh complained in 1792 that Tahiti was spoiled by tourists.

THE SOUTH SEAS still fall into three big geographical units of volcanic and coral islands, but little is the same above the water line.

Micronesia, a sea of tiny islands from Hawaii to Japan, is a United States trust territory soon to have some form of self-government. But it will remain peppered with American bases and Stars and Stripes pants.

The Gilbert and Ellice Islands — hardly viable together under Britain — are heading toward freedom, and they may split into two even less viable groupings.

Melanesia starts at New Guinea and takes in the Solomons, New Caledonia and the New Hebrides. The dark-skinned inhabitants are the most primitive and most advanced of the Pacific, living on its ugliest and most beautiful islands.

New Caledonia, marbled with nickel, is the South Seas' most prosperous island, and the French aren't leaving. Britain is disengaging itself from the Solomons, where people still use American World War II relics.

Papua, New Guinea, soon will be independent from Australia, with some copper-rich islands nearby, and the new state will be bigger than all the other South Pacific islands together.

Fiji, just west of Melanesia, is a mixture of farming, forests, industry and fantasyland. It is the fulcrum of the Pacific, but its leaders carefully avoid alarming newly independent neighbors by taking too active a role.

THE THIRD GROUP is Polynesia, the magical islands that set bank clerks to sea in 36-foot sloops. It is Tahiti, Samoa, Tonga, Easter Island and dozens of chains and atolls.

Moorea's side-by-side bays of Cook and Oponohu face probably the loveliest and most lush hills in the world.

Residents recall how James Michener reached Moorea, after writing of a "Bali Ha'i" inspired by Aoba Island in New Hebrides, to remark that he had found a real Bali Ha'i exactly as he had pictured it.

And Moorea, like most every other idyllic South Seas island, has electricity, packaged food and gasoline. Soon Moorea will have an automatic telephone exchange.

Much of Polynesia, including Tahiti and Moorea, is part of an overseas territory of France. Pressure for change is one of the hottest political questions in the ocean, as are French nuclear tests in a remote corner of Polynesia.

BUT PACIFIC politics are generally subdued, cushioned by miles of water and defused by traditional chief systems. Only France, the United States and Chile appear bent on retaining their possessions, and opposition to that is relatively mild.

Net political freedom has brought new cultural awareness, and old customs are being aired out for daily use and for tourists. And the islands find that, the more they plumb their heritage, the more they all have in common.

Before the Europeans, every island was self-sufficient. People lived in smoothly functioning societies, cooking enormous meals in underground ovens and following their passions with easy abandon.

A lot of the old life is left. Carbon copy sunsets set aflame thatch houses on hundreds of islands as men crouch around large wooden bowls drinking yellowish kava — or yaqona — with elaborate ritual.

Women with red hibiscus in their hair paddle outrigger canoes to markets all over the Pacific, selling green mangoes and visiting their friends.

"These islands have more of a chance for economic and social cooperation, if not political, than any other area of the world," says William B. Hussey, a former U.S. diplomat who heads the U.N. Development Program here.

"Right now, though, they're like a shy maiden getting a little excited, but not quite sure how far to go . . ."

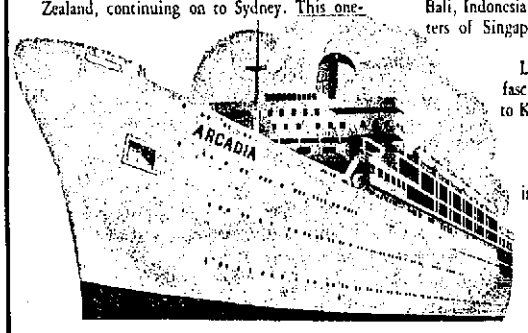

One Pacific statesman puts it this way:

"We don't understand very much about regional cooperation. We don't really like it. But we sense that in it lies our future."

CONSUMER NOTES

By DENISE KUSEL
Staff Writer

Plastic toxic dangers

Twenty-six of the nation's largest chemical companies have had complaints issued against them by the Federal Trade Commission for misrepresenting certain combustible plastics as being nonburning.

The FTC said that the plastics are subject to flash fires and emit poisonous smoke and extreme heat once ignited.

The plastics in question include foamed polyurethane and all forms of polystyrene — including related materials used widely in home construction and home furnishings as replacements for wood, glass and cotton.

These plastics are being used for home insulation, furniture cushions, bedding, home sidings, cabinets, chairs and lighting and plumbing fixtures.

The complaint names such companies as Allied Chemical Corp., Dow Chemical Corp., Dupont, and U.S. Steel Corp. and charges they have known of the fire hazards since 1967.

More than one billion pounds of these plastics were sold in 1972 — an increase, the FTC says, of about 20 per cent over the prior year.

Since 1967, there have been numerous cases of personal injury and property damage resulting from fires encouraged by these plastic materials, the FTC reports. The recent FTC warning may have been the result of the situation which occured when the space lab station became overheated and the polyurethane insulation inside the lab was cited as the source of release of potentially toxic gases.

Boating safety pamphlets

Five pamphlets prepared to teach boat enthusiasts safety have been developed by the State Department of Consumer Affairs in conjunction with the U.S. Coast Guard and the Department of Navigation and Ocean Development.

The pamphlets, which include information about fire extinguishers, life preservers, "Towing Tips for the Trailer Sailor," "Boating Safety Hints for Hunters and Fishermen," and "Safe Boating Hints for California Lakes and Reservations" are available by sending a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Safe Boating Consumer, P.O. Box 310, Sacramento, Calif. 95802.

Energy crisis and consumerism

The Department of the Interior has published a pamphlet "Energy, America and You," offering some steps consumers may take to help cut the use of electricity, natural gas and gasoline.

The booklet, available free by writing to Consumer Product Information, Pueblo, Colo. 81009, points out each person uses 36 per cent more energy than 10 years ago and by 1985, the annual requirements for energy will double the 1971 figure — and triple by the year 2000.

Marines hit beach Monday

By BUCK LANIER
Military Editor

A 13,000-man Marine Corps air-ground team will storm Camp Pendleton's beaches and hills starting at 10 a.m. Monday.

It will be "Operation Beagle Dancer" — testing the capability of reserve units from 53 cities, including Seal Beach and Los Alamitos.

The scenario calls for the mythical country of Campeen to call for help as aggressor forces attempt a takeover.

Forces will be combined with regulars blended into the 6,200 reserves to test the Marines "total force concept" over the week long operation.

An entire "library" of dirty tricks will be waiting for the landing forces as they come in via Navy landing ships and helicopters. One disruptive trick used in an earlier excercise was to "seed" several helicopter areas with some of Pendleton's many rattlesnakes.

There will be simulated gunfire support by 3rd Fleet units offshore and simulated mined areas in the beach assault area.

The landing forces are scheduled to battle their way inland to attack forces that arrived by helicopter.

Soviet ship sinks after collision

COOS BAY, Ore. (UPI) — The Coast Guard said Saturday that the charred hulk of an abandoned 278-foot Soviet fishing trawler sank in 600 feet of water 15 miles off the Oregon coast.

The fate of the ship, the Sezd Ulksm, was reported from her sister ship, the Nadhodka. The two vessels collided in heavy fog Friday, and the Nadhodka was towed to shore by a Soviet tug.

A crew of 150 men who adandoned the Sezd Ulksm was rescued by other ships of the 28-ship Soviet fishshing fleet operating in the area.

The Sezd Ulksm caught fire after the collision, and when the blaze burned out, the Coast Guard searched for it in heavy fog for many hours before locating it. The wreck was considered a navigation and pollution hazard.

Secret Witness cases, rewards

As part of the Independent Press-Telegram's Secret Witness program, summaries of cases in which rewards of specified amounts are offered are printed in the Independent and Press-Telegram each Thursday and Sunday. Rewards paid for information leading to the arrest and conviction of suspects in any other criminal cases, not covered in these summaries, will vary in amount depending on the seriousness of the offense. The summaries follow:

— Rewards totaling $4,000 including $2,000 guaranteed by the Independent, Press-Telegram's Secret Witness program and $2,000 offered by the Compton City Council, will be paid for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the murderer of 55-year-old Compton city employe Raymond Adams. Adams was shot to death by an unknown gunman as he was operating a city street sweeper at 4:45 a.m. Sunday at the northwest corner of Compton and Long Beach Boulevards. Officers answering a call of shots fired in the central Compton area found Adams slumped over the wheel of his sweeping machine, which was standing at the corner with the motor still running.

— Rewards totaling $3,000, including $2,000 guaranteed by Secret Witness and $1,000 posted by families of the victims, will be paid for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the killer of Mrs. Dorothy I. Truxa, 68, and Mrs. Margaret B. Miller, 57, on Aug. 14, 1971. Mrs Truxa, of Downey, and her widowed sister-in-law, Mrs. Miller, of Paramount, had driven to a shopping center at Firestone and Lakewood Boulevards in Downey, and failed to return home. Thier bodies were found in Mrs. Miller's car parked near the shopping center on the following day. Both women had been shot to death and their purses had been rifled.

— A $2,000 reward will be paid for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the murderer of Michael O. Vander Schaaf, 28, who was shot to death during a holdup of Vander Schaaf Liquor Store, 486 W. Wardlow Road, Long Beach, last June 10. One gunman shot Vander Schaaf three times without provocation after the victim had turned over money from the register as ordered. The holdup team, described only as four young black men, consisted of two men who entered the store and two getaway drivers waiting in separate cars outside.

— A $2,000 reward is offered for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the murderer of 21-year-old Joyce King, of 5221 Cortland Ave., Lynwood, slain in the early morning hours of Jan. 1, 1972. Miss King left her home shortly after midnight to walk to a nearby drive-in restaurant. Her partially-clothed body, slashed by 40 to 50 knife wounds, was found approximately eight hours later in an alley behind the 11600 block of Louise Avenue in Lynwood.

— A $1,000 reward is offered for information leading to the arrest and conviction of a man who robbed an East Long Beach branch of the Bank of America on last June 4. The man who fled the bank at 6437 E. Spring St. with $709 matches the description of a bandit who committed four bank robberies within 90 minutes throughout the area two days later and is a suspect in two earlier Southland bank holdups. The suspect is described as having blondish hair, about 5 feet 10 inches in height, and weighing about 160.

— A $2,000 reward will be paid for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the murderer of Julia Holan, 88, who died April 14 of injuries received when she was knocked down by a purse thief on Eighth Street near Pacific Avenue on the previous day. The killer thief was described as white, about 18 years old, about 5 feet, 8 inches tall, medium build, and with neatly trimmed brown hair.

— Rewards totaling $1,000 — $500 guaranteed by the Independent, Press-Telegram Secret Witness program and $500 posted by the Culinary Alliance and Hotel-Motel Workers Union of Long Beach and Orange County — will be paid for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the man or men who raped and stabbed a North Long Beach woman on the night of last June 14. The woman was starting to enter her house after returning from work when a man grabbed her, threw a sheet over her head and dragged her to a nearby vacant house where she was raped by her abductor and another man, then stabbed in the chest and seriously wounded.

— A $500 reward will be paid for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the driver responsible for the hit-run manslaughter death March 23 of 6-year-old Gary Perkins, of 625 Magnolia Ave. Gary, son of Eugene and Barbara Perkins, was walking with two adult friends of his parents to a nearby delicatessen and had stepped out in front of them to cross the street at Seventh Street and Magnolia Avenue when a car speeding south on Magnolia ran the red light, and struck the boy, and kept going. Police found the car, a 1965 red Mustang, abandoned near the Queen Mary the next day. The owner said it had been stolen.

— A $2,000 reward is offered for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the murderer of Deborah Ann Baker, 18, whose strangled body was found March 21 in a vacant field adjacent to Los Coytoes Country Club, near Beach Boulevard and Rosecrans Avenue in Fullerton. Fullerton police theorize the young woman's body was dumped in the field after she was killed in the early morning hours on that date in another location. Miss Baker was last seen alive by a girl firned with whom she was temporarily sharing an apartment at 1313 E. Wilshire Ave., Fullerton, at 1 p.m. on the previous day. At that time, she left the apartment and told her friend she was going on a job interview.

— Rewards totaling $4,000 — including $2,000 each from the Secret Witness programs of the Long Beach Independent, Press-Telegram and the Santa Monica Evening Outlook — will be paid for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the murderer of Kathleen Ann La Chance, aspiring Long Beach 24-year-old actress. Miss La Chance was last seen alive at 5 p.m. on Nov. 15, 1972, when she left an actors' workshop play rehearsal at the apartment of a friend in Los Angeles. Her nude body, arms bound by leather straps and mouth stuffed with sand, was found late that night near the pier on the Santa Monica beachfront. She had been raped and stabbed repeatedly.

— Rewards totaling $2,500 are offered for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the murderer of Mrs. Judith Cooper, 31, stabbed to death by a robber on the morning of last April 2, in a television rental shop at 8580 Washington Blvd. in Culver City, where she was employed as a secretary. Mrs. Cooper, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C.E

Report for Folks Over 65 Explains Medicare, Answers Questions

A factual report about the Federal Government's Medicare program and its benefits is being offered as a service of Certified Life Insurance Co. of Calif., Sherman Oaks, to people 65 and over, or to people who have friends and relatives eligible for Federal Medicare.

The 1973 "Medicare Report" is a special edition of a newsletter normally sent only to affiliated company policyholders. The company has received so many requests for this valuable information that it is now making copies of the Report available directly to the public without cost.

Basically, the Report is a comprehensive study of the Medicare program, explained in everyday language. The "Medicare Report" explains how to enroll in Medicare, how to collect a Medicare claim, what bills Medicare can and cannot pay, and how you can benefit from Medicare even if you never actually go to the hospital.

"Part B" Explained

This 1973 "Medicare Report" also clearly defines "Part B," an optional plan for Medicare members.

Unlike the basic hospital Medicare program (Part A), which is free to people qualified for Social Security benefits, Part B costs members $6.30 every month, about $75.00 per year, so it is important for the senior citizen to have all the facts before he decides whether to join it when he is eligible.

Other special sections of the Report tell you what to do if you miss an enrollment period, who is entitled to Medicare help, and how to get more information.

A copy of this interesting and valuable "Medicare Report" will be mailed to you if you send a postcard or letter to Jim Phillips, Dept. , Certified Life Insurance Co. of California, Sherman Oaks, Calif. 91403. There is no cost or obligation for this service.

Compton embarks on 'end violence' era

Council gives new chief 'carte blanche'

By TOM WILLIAM and MARK CLUTTER

Compton—where youth gangs squared off in the streets or issued ultimatums to school officials, where a classroom became the scene of gunplay, where worried residents met late into the nights—is through lying down.

For two years, while trouble and violence increased in the city, questions were often met with soothing answers. They were, apparently, not enough.

But in the last six months, things have changed in Compton. The police chief resigned in February. The superintendent of schools took a job in Georgia. The mayor was voted out of office.

This week, when new police Chief Thomas W. Cochee was introduced to the city council, he told officials his aims were to safeguard lives and end violence. New Mayor Doris Davis gave him "carte blanche to bring that to pass" and the council concurred.

Cochee, at 41 a modern blend of policeman and professor, later made it clear he is interested in law and order—and justice:

"I have two hands. One wears a velvet glove. The other is attached to the long arm of the law and it holds a .38."

The choice between hands apparently will be left to the youths in Compton, who Cochee intends to disarm as his first goal with either negotiations or the force of the law.

"We have already had three meetings with youth gang leaders," said Cochee. "We are trying to get them to give up their warfare and arrange a truce. We are trying to persuade them to lay down their guns."

In the streets, another method is being used, he added.

"We are detaching policemen, both uniformed and in plain clothes, from other duties to patrol the streets. They stop young people and talk to them. They frisk them and confiscate their guns and other weapons. They make arrests for violations of any law."

The moves are part of a three-point program with which the tall, slim Cochee hopes to transform the youth gang structure in Compton with its "excitement and prestige" into a positive force with the same rewards.

His first point is education, an effort to provide school dropouts and youths from culturally-deprived areas with the skills to cope with society.

Cochee's second point is athletics. Without coaches or equipment for athletics, the new chief believes, activities move into the streets. Cochee has worked to schedule weekly track meets and has sought Compton officers to help start a police athletic league.

His third focus is employment for young persons, he said. For persons between the ages of 16 and 25 in Compton, he explained, jobs are scarce. He said he has appealed to businessmen to give young people a chance to work.

That Cochee is concentrating on Compton's youth in trying to calm the city is not by accident. "This city has a median age of less than 20 years," he said. "Almost all burglaries are committed by persons under 21. And burglary is the number one crime in America."

Cochee said he has intensified a state-sponsored anti-burglary program used in Compton. Under the program, a special police unit makes community appearances to build public cooperation and advise citizens how to protect against burglars.

The chief said he sees a direct tie between violence and burglary.

"Many of the guns in the hands of youths were obtained through burglary," he said. "I think every citizen should consider the possible consequences of owning a gun. If he has one, he should find a secure hiding place out of reach of children."

All American cities are heavily armed, he said, but there probably are more guns in Compton than most other places. The antigun drive, he added, will be emphasized with youths but will include adults too.

The plans of the new chief show signs of both sides of his background. Before coming to Compton, he taught at Oakland's Merritt College and headed the campus' Department of the Administration of Justice.

He previously served as a deputy sheriff in Los Angeles County and in the public defender's office. Over the past 20 years, he pursued an education that includes master's degree in public administration.

He keeps fit by jogging and weightlifting and, surprisingly, is a grandfather.

Fossils tell of El Toro's Ocean past

By Molly Burrell
Staff Writer

El Toro where today giant earth movers romp and roar, was once the marineland of Orange County, a playland for whales, doplhins and sea lions.

Their fossils are proving it day by day in a newly subdivided section of the country about seven miles inland from Laguna Beach.

The whales and their fellow marine animals, were swimming there between 16-18 million years ago, estimates Dr. Larry Barnes, curator of the Los Angeles County Museum of Natural History where the bones are now in safe keeping. The shoreline was probably about three miles northwest of the excavation sites, up near the Santa Ana mountains, he says.

HE CALLS the fossil finds, first unearthed when a bulldozer cut into a hill last February, "of tremendous importance in bridging a gap between other known eras."

To date, fragments of skeletons of bat rays, sharks, and even a tiny chunk of crocodile skin have also come to light after an initial find by a Costa Mesa environmental impact study group called Archaeological Research, Inc.

That group alerted Dr. Barnes who immediately went to the site and agreed to take charge of the finds acting for the museum which is the principle salvage agent in the Southland.

IN MID-MARCH the first baleen (toothless) whale turned up, and Monday the third one was unearthed. Both would have been about 22-25 feet long he says.

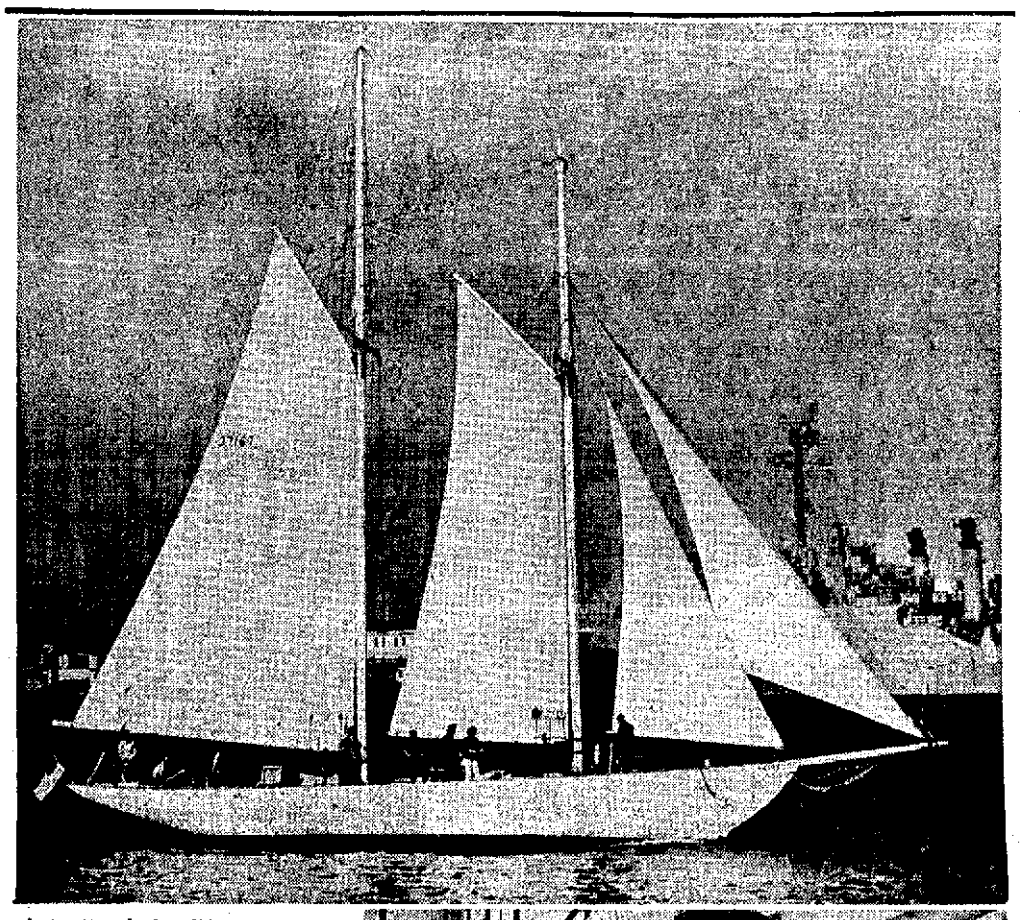

How does he know their age?

By extrapolation.

In the fragments of rock found next to the old whale bones, Dr. Barnes explains, are remains of thousands of microscopic animals with shells. These are called Foraminifera, and they are the clue because the time spans of their species have been carefully charted. Scientists can almost pinpoint their age, "give or take a million years, says Dr. Barnes.

The importance of the finds, he explains is that they fill a time gap in the history of the West Coast.

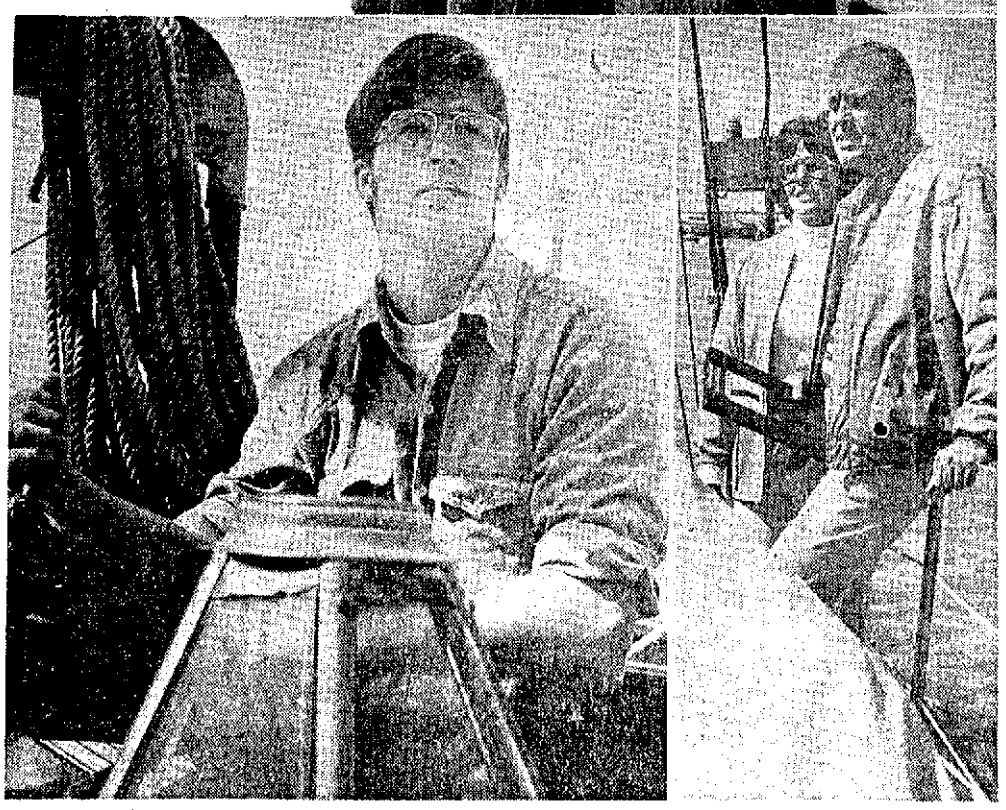

"We've seen a lot of remains from the Early Miocene period (between 21-22 million years ago) and the Middle Miocene period (13-15) million years ago) but practically nothing in between," he says.

A taste of the life that seafaring men have lived for centuries, facing the sea under sail, will be offered next month to some 20 Long Beach high school students aboard the 80-foot schooner Salee, shown in Long Beach Harbor at top. For two weeks beginning Aug. 20, the students will sail the Salee to Catalina Island and other ports of call under a program of the Los Altos YMCA. There still are openings for several youthful crew members on the voyage, said Lisa and Paul Perry, below right, who will direct the program. Students, including those who will be entering high school next fall, will be taught navigation with instruments such as that shown with Bob Kirkland, below left, and will spend much of their time like Shelly Ikenberry and Jeff Smith, right, simply relaxing. Information about the cruise is available from the YMCA, at 1720 Bellflower Blvd.

Seal Beach begins bike safety drive after boys' deaths

If you're going to cycle in Seal Beach, watch it!

A citywide drive for bicycle safety — and against bike traffic violations — is in full swing, sparked by a double tragedy last month.

Two boys, ages 7 and 12, died in bike accidents June 9 and 20. The older boy rode through a red light, the younger rode on the wrong side of the street. Both collided with cars, both were apparently "inattentive," says Police Lt. Sam D'Amico, coordinator of the safety campaign.

For the pleasant little beach town of 27,500, the two deaths within 11 days were both a shock and a catalyst.

The catalyst has turned out to be what the lieutenant calls "heightened community concern and demand for an expanded crackdown on traffic law violators.

"For the past five years we had conducted a bike safety program along the usual lines — campaigns at school, Bike Rodeos, skill riding tests, licensing program," he says.

In the last year or so, he continues, the city has had a large influx of school age youngsters and increasing numbers of young adults riding their bikes to the beach.

"It's the 18-30 year old group that started to give us problems," Lt. D'Amico says.

"They were careless about stopping at intersections, riding on the wrong side of the street, carrying passengers. So we began stopping them and warning them, and citing some of them.

"That made some of them irate," he says. "They insisted a bicycle is not a vehicle. However, all traffic laws apply to bicycles and we just kept on citing."

Since June 20, however, officers are not getting so much resistance when they write out tickets or warn riders, he says.

Those under 13 get a juvenile referral notice and the city juvenile officer gets in touch with them. Those between 14-18 are referred to Juvenile Court, adults are cited to appear in Municipal Court. Most offenses carry a $10 maximum fine.

Coupled with the citation crackdown is a multi-dimensional community awareness program which involves city recreation and fire departments, schools, and organizations throughout the city, Lt. D'Amico says.

At city hall, they're looking into the needs and possible locations of bike trails.

Irvine Co. President Mason dies

William R. Mason, 54, president of the Irvine Co., died of an apparent heart attack at his home at Newport Beach Saturday.

Mr. Mason, who also served as western region president of the Boy Scouts of America, had headed the land development firm since 1966. A spokesman said Mason had appeared in good health and had worked at his office all day Saturday.

The company developed the 80,000-acre master planned town of Irvine in Orange County. A University of California branch campus also is located in the community of 25,000.

A native of Seattle, Mr. Mason is survived by his widow Elizabeth, a son and two daughters.

Funeral arrangements are pending.

On Moulton ranch

Huge housing tract planned for south part of Orange Co.

By BOB GEIVET
Staff Writer

A major development project for Orange County's southern area is in the works, calling for construction on much of the 9,686 acres of the Moulton ranch.

Planner John Chapman of Irvine said that the projects being designed include 1,000 dwelling units for families with incomes of $8,000 per year or less. There would be a total of 18,080 dwelling units.

He said that two thirds of the Moulton Ranch area would be undeveloped for what he said would be "permanent open space."

The ranch, lying between Laguna Niguel and Laguna Hills Leisure World, and the San Diego Freeway near Coast Highway at South Laguna, is now owned by several persons.

Heirs of the late Lewis Moulton own two-thirds of the acreage. Chapman College was given 250 acres, Mr. and Mrs. Ivar Hanson of San Clemente have 1,112 acres, Rockwell International Corp. owns 1,234 acres and a group of school teachers have 210 acres.

Development would center around the seven story building Rockwell International constructed as a headquarters — and never used — and which is now for sale.

A deal is pending by which Rockwell International will trade the vacant building to the federal government for other lands, some vacant. The deal has tentative approval of the General Services Administration.

About 1,000 federal employes in a variety of agencies would be headquartered in the structure which Rockwell had designed for 7,000 aerospace workers.

A commercial development would be centered around this plant, Chapman said. Plans also call for a divided highway linking the San Diego Freeway and Laguna Canyon Road, which is destined for freeway development by the state.

A needed development

In drawer after drawer and folder after folder, clippings in our library detail this city's long efforts to develop its downtown shoreline as a convention, tourist and recreation center as well as the usual retail-office heart of the community.

We've had our ups and downs

SUBSIDENCE FROM oil production virtually halted any development of the downtown area for more than a decade. On the good side, the funds from the oil production finally were able to stop and repair the physical damage and begin to provide new facilities needed to make up for the long economic battering the city endured.

This Wednesday the fate of one of the major elements of our city's economic health is up for review before the California Coastal Zone Conservation Commission when it meets in our Harbor Department Board Room.

For some 15 years, as funds became available, the city has been enlarging and improving the Pacific Terrace Convention Center around our ancient Municipal Auditorium. We have new parking, we have a new Sports Arena, we are ready to remodel the auditorium, construct a convention exhibit hall. We have new roads in the area, a new lagoon and aquatic park is outlined in the adjacent man-made beach area. (And don't forget the Queen Mary across the channel.)

Sadly, we do not have the necessary hotel and restaurant facilities to complete the convention and tourist complex and make it a viable addition to our city.

AND THAT IS the issue before the Coastal Conservation Commission.

Specifically, the city is asking the commission to deny an appeal and to uphold a decision by the South Coast Regional Commission approving construction of a 300-room Sheraton Motor Hotel and five free-standing restaurants.

These facilities are proposed for a section of sand which is not suitable for normal beach-type use. The sand is and must be protected by a rock dike. The water is 20 to 50 feet deep — completely unsuitable for swimming or boating. This also is in the Los Angeles River estuary and has problems with silting and debris. Seaward is the Queen Mary, directly landward is a six-lane highway.

IN A 1971 LETTER summarizing and updating Pacific Terrace progress and plans, City Manager John Mansell made these comments to the City Council:

"We feel that any motor inns or restaurants constructed on that site should be developed in a manner which will preserve as much open space as possible, and retain the public walkways and bicycle paths planned for the area . . . In our opinion, this consideration is extremely important from an environmental standpoint . . . any improvements planned for the area must serve to enhance rather than to detract from that environment."

And that's exactly what the proposal before the State Commission does.

UNLESS PROPOSITION 20, the act which established the Coastal Zone Commission, is to be interpreted as calling for a moratorium on construction in our coastal cities, there is, in our view, every reason under the terms of the act for the Commission to approve the development.

We trust that will happen Wednesday.

No prizes, thank you

A Northern California newspaper photographer carried a cigar with him for months although he did not smoke.

A cigar manufacturers' association offered a prize for the best newspaper photo in which a cigar figured prominently. But people doing newsy things are seldom smoking cigars at the time. The photographer realized he might be required to improve upon nature.

BY THE TIME his opportunity came, the cigar was stale. While that might have bothered the smoker, it had no adverse effect on the photograph. The photographer spotted a fireman sitting braced against a wall, using both hands to train a hose on a fire. Knowing that the man enjoyed an occasional cigar, the photographer offered him one, placed it in his mouth, lit it, waited for a small ash to develop and then stepped back and took a prize-winning photograph.

This sort of manufactured news is not regarded with favor by ethical journalists, but it is perhaps not quite so offensive as the news story or editorial that is tailored to win a contest. Happily, ethical standards in journalism are rising. Even managing editors have decided to refuse to accept free rides at their next convention at Disney World. So fewer outfits these days try to buy news stories with prizes for the best story lauding wood paneling or the beauties of Bakersfield.

There are some such offers, though, and one came in the mail the other day to our food editor, Virginia Heffington. She found it amusing, as almost anyone would.

ITS SOURCE WAS the Georgia Poultry Federation, Inc., P.O. Box 763, Gainesville, Ga. 30501. The Georgia chicken farmers announced awards "for the best stories or editorials, written or aired, on the dilemma of the poultry industry and the question mark it poses for consumers."

That's the old-fashioned technique at its most blatant, but the Georgia chicken shippers invested it with charm. The poultry federation promises a first prize of 100 baby chicks. The second prize will be 500 chicks. The third prize will be 1,000 chicks.

THESE PRIZES echo the old joke about the contest with a first prize of one week in Philadelphia and a second prize of two weeks in Philadelphia. Their point is that the poultry industry says its costs so outrun frozen retail prices that it makes more sense to kill chickens, or give them away, than to raise them and sell them or their eggs.

If anyone enters this editorial in that contest, we will deny we wrote it and mark any cheeping packages from Georgia "Return to sender."

Ehrlichman tries long end run

WASHINGTON — John D. Ehrlichman not only moved in to take over the government's internal security function from the FBI with his infamous White House "plumbers" operation, but also tried to steal a large piece of the action last year from the Committee to Re-elect the president (CREEP).

Successful in setting up and running the "plumbers," Ehrlichman stumbled and fell — not once, but three times — in his secret grab for political power from CREEP.

Robert Novak

Inside Report

Rowland Evans

THE BIZARRE story of Ehrlichman, then President Nixon's White House domestic chief, jockeying for partial command of CREEP's overmanned political battalions — and getting his comeuppance from CREEP's director, Clark MacGregor — came to light only after publication of Ehrlichman's outlandish accusation against MacGregor this week.

On May 4, in his first testimony to federal prosecutors on the Watergate investigation, Ehrlichman charged that MacGregor had rejected Ehrlichman suggestions to "get to the bottom" of the Watergate scandal. A summary of Ehrlichman's interview with the investigators was published earlier this week.

MacGregor, the former Minnesota Congressman put in charge of CREEP July 1, 1972, with the sudden post-Watergate resignation of John N. Mitchell, flatly denied Ehrlichman's accusation. Moreover, MacGregor told us, the only "repeated" proposals he was getting from Ehrlichman last summer were proposals that Ehrlichman's top lieutenants be given major campaign roles.

THUS, IN THOSE critical days, Ehrlichman was not concerned with uncovering Watergate mischief but in adding the reelection campaign to his immense presidential delegation of authority over the domestic side of the U.S. government.

Ehrlichman's pressure apparently started while Mitchell, never an Ehrlichman intimate, was still running CREEP. Ehrlichman wanted to give his own top aides, including Edward L. Morgan and John C. Whitaker of his Domestic Affairs Council staff, overall control of key states he felt CREEP was taking for granted: California, Michigan, Ohio, Illinois, Pennsylvania, New York and Missouri.

Ehrlichman began by applying pressure to Frederick V. Malek, top political deputy in CREEP. Malek went to MacGregor in early August, complaining that Ehrlichman's pressure was becoming intolerable and asking for help in cooling off Mr. Nixon's powerful confidant.

But MacGregor couldn't stop Ehrlichman either. Ehrlichman kept interposing himself between CREEP and local Republican organizations. Puzzled by the pressure, MacGregor set up a breakfast in his Miami Beach suite during the Republican national convention.

At the breakfast, Ehrlichman did most of the talking but ran into a stone wall. MacGregor said no, the help of Ehrlichman's personal staff was not needed. The matter seemed closed.

IT WAS FAR from closed. On either Aug. 27 or 28, after Mr. Nixon left Miami Beach to plot his fall campaign in San Clemente, MacGregor received another long distance call, this one from Ehrlichman's patron and collaborator: the all-powerful H.R. Haldeman, who was with the President.

Haldeman said Ehrlichman felt his plan had not had a "fair hearing" and was pressing Haldeman to intervene. Furious at what MacGregor later called Ehrlichman's "hammer and tongs" pressure, MacGregor nevertheless agreed to fly to San Clemente with Malek and confront Ehrlichman yet again.

With Haldeman listening, Ehrlichman went through the now familiar refrain: under Malek's field operation, CREEP was losing the biggest states to the Democrats, but the MacGregor-Malek team couldn't know it because of poor reporting from its field staff.

Again, MacGregor and Malek rejected the proposal and ridiculed Ehrlichman's political intelligence. The President, they said, would carry each state on Ehrlichman's "lost" list.

One hour later, Haldeman turned to Ehrlichman and said: "For heaven's sake, John, drop it. Clark has made his decision and he's acting within his authority." That finally finished one of Ehrlichman's longest, most futile end runs.

Contrary to his present claims before federal prosecutors, Ehrlichman was exerting no such energy in trying to "get to the bottom" of Watergate. If he had, John D. Ehrlichman might today still be riding in that long black limousine and running the federal government, instead of battling desperately for his life.

Students' choice

EDITOR:

Associated Students fees at state university campuses are often spent for what Assemblyman Vincent Thomas of San Pedro called "questionable purposes." Thomas charges that the funds were used, among other things, to send students to Oakland for a funeral and to buy a boat for use as an incentive prize for food service personnel.

Considering these and many other questionable expenditures of student body fees, I too find myself wishing that there were effective controls on this spending. On the other hand, I know as a student that many of the programs Thomas condemned — such as the Communiversity West, the child day care center and student speakers' programs — are worth the $20 fee.

Mr. Thomas wants to rescind Associated Students fees and all the activities they finance because of the existence of an "ultraliberal center" for studying radical economics at the University of California at San Diego and not because of otherwise misappropriated funds on our campus in Long Beach.

A shift of spending from athletic and cultural programs to support of small organizations of students reflects new attitudes and life-styles of students that are as valid as those activites Mr. Thomas would have students spend their own funds on. They may be more valid.

I for one, hope his attempts at eliminating student fees are not successful and that students can find their own answers to the problems that do exist in appropriations.

No bouquets

EDITOR:

The other day, in the space of a very short item, you managed to misspell "bouquet," in referring to Bouquet Canyon, twice.

Once you inserted a gratuitous "g" midway in the word. Another time you put the "e" directly after the "q."

Might I suggest that you fire your expensive computerized machinery and hire a real life, flesh and blood typesetter, who knew what he was doing before computers were thought of, and supplement him with the services of a fairly intelligent third grader as proofreader?

I am addicted to your paper, but do not want to become addicted to the tranquilizers I had to take after trying to decipher a recent Gil Bailey piece on your editorial page.

This criticism may wound your sometimes justifiable pride, but merely writing it has reduced my blood pressure by at least ten points.

Help wild birds

EDITOR:

What do you do with a sick or injured wild bird when you find one? It takes more than good intentions to help it recover. Caring for birds is such a highly specialized skill that not even every veterinarian will treat them. When they do, the rates are usually the same as for your own private pet.

Dr. Thad E. Thorson of Long Beach and Dr. James E. Rich of Newport Beach treat wild birds free of charge, but birds don't always oblige by becoming ill or injured during office hours and delay in treatment most often is fatal. It is not fair to expect these two compassionate men to assume full responsibility for all wild birds. They are everybody's responsibility.

In the spring and summer there are countless baby birds in need of care. Not everyone who finds one can, wants to or knows how to raise it. The casualty rate is needlessly high.

Sheffield Park in Sussex, England, has a Wild Bird Rescue Service. It is run on a voluntary basis and financed by donations. If the citizens of a little town in England can find it in their hearts to help our helpless feathered friends, then surely we, the citizens of a city with the wonderful Eldorado Park Nature Center to its credit (the center attracts many species of birds), can do the same.

With a lot of help and effort we could someday have a Wild Bird Rescue Service that will be internationally known for its innovations in the skillful treatment of birds.

Readers who are interested in helping organize such a rescue service are urged to write to me at 3509 Ladoga Ave., Long Beach, CA. 90808, or call me at 421-9222.

Pentagon and inflation

EDITOR:

All the learned bilge one reads about the causes of our inflation!

Might it be suggested that pouring $200 billion of our national treasure down a nonproductive rathole in Southeast Asia had something to do with the case?

Did anyone think the average citizen would not have to pay the piper for that monumental folly sooner or later?

One of the ways to beat inflation, President Nixon correctly points out, is to cut back on governmental spending. But instead of cutting back on the swollen military budget with the Vietnam war over, he increases it to $80 billion to keep the Pentagon happy — and cuts back instead on social services to the aged and the poor.

McGovern spelled out a program for cutting $30 billion off the military budget without affecting our security. It was drawn up by such knowledgeable people as former Assistant Defense Secretary Paul Warnke and military men. McGovern also proposed to plug the big tax loopholes for additional revenue.

The people, in their infinite wisdom, preferred Nixon by a landslide. Well, they got him, and they deserve him.

Long Beach GEORGE C. MYER

Networks unfair

EDITOR:

The bias of the networks in reporting the Watergate Follies has long been apparent even to those who are not Nixon "men" nor even Republicans, but never so blatantly as when two of the networks decided not to carry the second day of questioning of John Mitchell.

While John Dean tried to save his hide, using innuendo and his "impressions" to assassinate the character of the President, all three networks subjected the people to all four days of the charges and slurs being reiterated in every possible form. However, when the most important man to appear to date before the committee answers those charges, two of the networks elected not to bring this side of the story to the public.

There can be no possible explanation for their position except bias and prejudice, and I hope the Federal Communications Commisision will take this disservice into consideration when the time comes to renew local licenses.

Did Eagleton, Wallace affairs beat McGovern?

"Right from the Start," a new book by Gary Warren Hart, Sen. George McGovern's presidential campaign manager, is a triple-play title.

It denotes time; the fact that his inside chronicle of the campaign covers beginning to end. "Right" doesn't mean that McGovern or Hart were correct from the beginning and it doesn't mean, of course, that the man or the campaign were conservative "right."

Bob Houser

Political Editor

Hart, a young Denver lawyer, carries a dented shield from the Nixon wars and an irresistibility that will spur him to other campaigns. The next may be his own 1974 U.S. Senate race in Colorado against incumbent Republican Peter Dominick. The impression, in an interview, is that he will be the author of political trails of the future rather than a scribe of fresh history.

The campaign director's book hasn't been done before, says Hart, and its view is of a single campaign rather than the Theodore White-type overview of several. Its market, if nowhere else, would be among the million who worked for McGovern last year or the three-quarters of a million who gave money, Hart believes. The $7.95 book is published by Quadrangle-The New York Times Book Co.

Because hindsighters make such a point of criticizing McGovern for excluding Democratic party regulars from the 1972 Miami convention, it seemed fair basis for a question to Hart in the interview.

"I spent a year and a half of my life trying to get politicians to go on our slate of delegates," he said, "and I resent the hell out of it, frankly, of people saying that I excluded them from the convention.

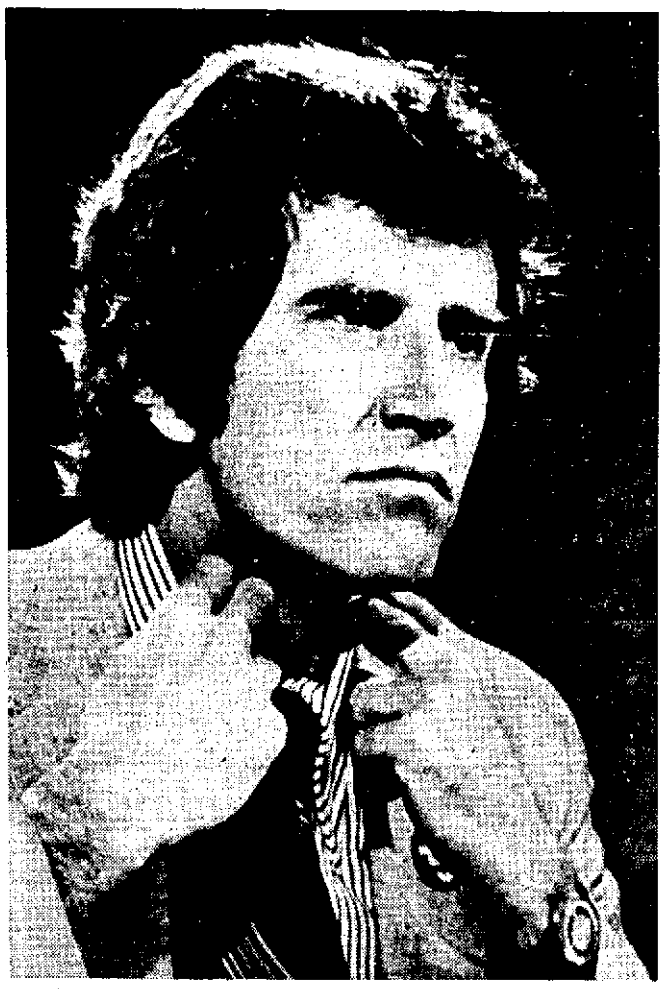

"We didn't exclude them; they excluded themselves. When the (delegate) slates for the primary states had to be put together in January, February and March the frontrunner was Ed Muskie. A lot of the party leaders who didn't like Muskie — thought he was too liberal — were for Humphrey. So you go back and look at the slates for Muskie and Humphrey in most of the primary states and you'll find most of the party leaders.

"They were either for Muskie because he was the frontrunner or for Humphrey because they thought he was the most conservative, or traditional, or whatever. We had no choice but to put the unknown people on our slate. We tried to get the known people. I begged them to be on our slate here in this state and in other states. Do you think they'd go on a George McGovern slate when they had to be filed by state law in California? Not on your life. So what choice did we have?"

Hart cited an experience in his own state of Colorado where McGovern people controlled the state convention which was to select 10 at-large delegates to the national convention. McGovern people gave two seats "to the Humphreys and the stop-McGovern people. This was a week before they went to the (Democratic National Committee) credentials committee and stuck a knife in our back."

His reference was to the committee decision to strip McGovern of his winner-take-all package of 271 California delegates and allot them instead in proportion to the primary's popular vote. In a dramatic floor battle the national convention later restored all 271 to McGovern.

The stop-McGovern people, says Hart, "were the exact counterparts of the demonstrators in Chicago." (In that 1968 Humphrey convention party regulars held a business-as-usual session, deaf to the pleas of young, "new politics" outsiders.)

GARY HART
How it all happened

Four years later the stop-McGovern regulars were on the outside. "In Miami we sat in meetings with them," Hart continued, "and they said, 'We'll destroy the Democratic party before we'll let McGovern get the nomination.'

"And they're the same people who looked out those hotel windows in Chicago (at the rioting, etc,) and said, 'What are those people so upset about?'

"The fact is the McGovern campaign was building bridges to the regular party in June and the credentials committee met and the stop-McGovern movement stole our California delegates. So who excluded whom? After we were in a position to conciliate I think we made every effort; we were shifting people into alternate slots and trying to get Humphreyites and political leaders onto our delegation. They'd even say, 'I can't promise I'll vote for McGovern' and we'd say, 'That's all right, we want you, we want the party united.'"

Since the 1972 election Senator McGovern has told the party's reform commission that he favors some procedure to get a percentage of party leaders at the convention, Hart said, "some guarantee of reward for services performed."

Labor and political leaders like Chicago's Mayor Richard Daley tried to place blocs of uncommitted delegates in the convention with which "to deal," said Hart. "Well, they missed the whole mood of the year. There wasn't going to be any dealing at that convention; you were really going to have it when you got there or you weren't.

"When the heat is on and people are so intensely related to one candidate or another and are for McGovern or Muskie or somebody else, you just can't sell uncommitted status."

Hart made the point that the controversial delegation rule changes, touched off by the 1968 convention strife, were adopted after several years' consideration, by the Democratic National Committee and by its chairman, Lawrence O'Brien, "not by George McGovern."

What destroyed McGovern, Hart said, was the selection and dumping of Sen. Thomas Eagleton as the vice presidential nominee and the absence from the race of Alabama Gov. George Wallace.

McGovern, Hart opines, had excellent insights into the mood of the electorate in the primaries, realizing "they were hungry for a politician who would tell the truth, say what he thought regardless of the consequences or what the polls said, who would not try to be a centrist and try to develop a consensus strategy which tested the wind and then tried to get in front of the people, who would not calculate his stands according to the drift of public opinion but would be very honest and straightforward.

"And that's why they were voting for him in the primaries — in California and everywhere else.

"Now, what happened in the fall, in my judgment, is that they felt — largely because of the Eagleton incident — that he WAS like other politicians, that he WAS making decisions on the basis of what was best for the ticket rather than what was the best thing to do.

"And after Wallace was knocked out of the race the only way we could win was to get the Wallace vote."

In remarking McGovern's defeat, most people missed the point that 1972 was a two-man race rather than a three-man race, said Hart. "The reason Humphrey didn't get smashed the same way in 1968 was that George Wallace was on the ticket and Humphrey almost won.

"The fact is McGovern ran only three or four percentage points behind the Humphrey showing in 1968 and yet we were trounced. The difference, of course, was that Wallace was out of the race in 1972."

McGovern's economic policies "were not that bad," said Hart. "They were very poorly packaged and communicated, in my judgment. But the plan itself at one time had been given very serious attention by the White House. Nixon himself was intrigued by it. Milton Friedman (Nixon economist) proposes such a thing. It's not a radical...I mean, if it's radical, it's radical on both ends of the spectrum and not just radical left."

Why, after the election, did McGovern criticize press campaign coverage?

"I think he was terribly frustrated by the fact our campaign was covered more critically, he thought, than the Nixon campaign. He thought there were not the tough kinds of questions being asked of the Nixon people about corruption in government, Watergate and other things.

"Second, I think he was frustrated at the level of reporting — that personalities in our campaign and reported differences among those personalities got so much coverage while the real issues of war, tax reform, the economy and defense spending were not given as much attention.

"And it just drove him up the wall when a story about whether I was getting along with Larry O'Brien or whether Frank Mankiewicz (communications chief) was getting along with (former Democratic Chairman) Jean Westwood came out because the country was going to hell."

McGovern, Hart said, has offered his help if Hart decides to run for Colorado's U.S. Senate seat. But Hart reminded McGovern that the senator faces a pretty tough race for reelection next year in his own South Dakota.

Wouldn't the 1972 campaign attacks against McGovern as a radical liberal tend to injure McGovern's reelection bid?

"It's my understanding," said Hart, "that practically every opponent he runs against out there does what Hubert Humphrey and John Connally did to him nationwide and he's been running there for 12 or 15 years. So I don't think the people there were too surprised.

"And I think Watergate will increase his chances somewhat, on two levels: First, it does take the edge off the margin of defeat in November, 1972, and, second, he had understood that the White House was planning to mount a substantial campaign to defeat him in South Dakota. I think their hands are tied with other things now so I don't think they'll be meddling out there."

The proposition that Republicans wanted McGovern to be the 1972 nominee because he would be the easiest to beat is "spurious" in Hart's view.

"The fact is they started sabotaging our campaign before McGovern got the nomination. And I don't buy the theory that Republicans conditioned the Democratic party's nomination procedure. That is to say, I don't think the dirty tricks forced Muskie and Humphrey and Jackson out.

"It's more difficult to calculate the damage done by dirty tricks in the fall campaign. If the reports are true that Mr. Ehrlichman (Nixon's domestic affairs chief, John Ehrlichman) had the files on Senator Eagleton and if the White House or CREEP (Committee to Re elect the President) used that information to get the story out the way it came out, then they materially altered the outcome of the election."

Watergate perspective

A Gallup poll taken late last month indicated the American people are about equally divided in believing the Watergate scandal is "a very serious matter" and those who feel "it's just politics — the kind of thing both parties engage in." There is a tendency to view it as a breakdown in our system of government. The best answer, in my opinion, to that view is given by the former editor of the Wall Street Journal reprinted in the July Reader's Digest when he said:

In the wake of Watergate one comment frequently heard is that the affair is a black mark on our political system — not just a black mark on the judgment and character of some within the political system, but on the system itself.

Perhaps this is an understandable reaction. After all, here is a scandal that has reached into the highest places among those holding offices of trust and confidence. Moreover, it is an unusual scandal in that it involves not personal greed — which, though deplorable, is at least familiar — but a broad plot to destroy all effective political opposition. It thus struck at the very root of democracy.

But, in the midst of our outrage, we ought to be mindful of one thing: the scandal was not a failure of our political system; indeed, it was the political system that saved us. Under a different political system, or had ours not functioned as it should, the misdeeds of these individuals would never have been known, and we would not now have the opportunity for our public indignation.

Let us consider: It was a federal grand jury that brought the first indictments, and it was a federal judge who first raised official doubts about the adequacy of an investigation that led only to those first seven defendants.

The thing to note here is that the system gave District Judge John Sirica the freedom to act as he did. A federal judge is answerable to no man's whim, neither President nor congressman. He can be impeached only for a felony, not for his judgment, and nobody can cut off his salary. The system, then, erected the wall around him that gave him his independence.

Now consider the role of Congress. There has been much criticism of Congress lately for its lack of independence from the presidency, but in this instance congressmen — individually and collectively — played a major part in keeping the affair from being buried.

There is, for one thing, the formal investigation launched by Sen. Sam Ervin's committee. This assured, if nothing else, that the affair would continue as a public issue, and as proof of its power the committee ultimately won its struggle with the President over the question of executive privilege for those on the White House staff under suspicion of involvement.

Nor should individual members of Congress be overlooked. Led by Sen. Barry Goldwater, even those within the President's own party bagan to speak out publicly, one after another, demanding a full airing of the affair.

Again, the point is that they could do this because our political system makes them independent in office from the office of the Chief Executive. With a different system, with one that made the legislature beholden to the executive, this continuing pressure on the President would have been impossible.

Finally, there was the role of the press. The press is not an institution of government, but it is very much a part of our political process, made by the First Amendment of our Constitution as independent as either Congress or the judiciary.

Here the press gave the lie to those who say it is, or can be, intimidated. In the face of criticism that it was scandal-mongering, in the face of harassment and other pressures, newspapers continued to probe beneath all the denials, digging for the truth of the matter. If they have not found it all, they found much that was hidden.

"Some people ... will say that Watergate demonstrates the bankruptcy of the American political system," President Nixon said in his April 30th talk to the nation. "I believe precisely the opposite is true. Watergate represented a series of illegal acts and bad judgments by a number of individuals. It was the system that has brought the facts to light and that will bring those guilty to justice ... It is essential now that we place our faith in that system."

Essential — and justified. If, amid our shame, we have lost sight of that, those who watch us from afar have not. "The way this scandal is being ruthlessly exposed," remarked the London Observer, "should strengthen America's claim to be the most open society ... In few (countries) could it have been exposed as publicly as now in the U.S."

There it is. And if the affair is not yet over, the same process will continue. When a few within one part of the system do a public injury, there is cause for outrage. Yet there is also cause for pride in a political system so devised that other parts are free to redress the injury.

And Still the Waters Run On: The Betrayal of the Five Civilized Tribes. By Angie Debo. Princeton, $2.95 paperbound.

The treaties protecting them were to last "as long as the waters run," but the independent republics of the Choctaws, Cherokees, Chickasaws, Seminoles and Creeks, each with their own legislatures, educational and judicial systems in the Indian Territory were destroyed at the behest of land-hungry whites. Angie Debo told this tragic story in 1940, but it stirred few people then; it is reprinted now when Indians are organized in demanding their rights. — N.

Meticulous draftsmanship, an outrageous whimsicality and a devilish wit are the hallmarks of the drawings of a new young artistic talent, Jan Faust. His work has appeared in the New York Times, the Nation, New York Magazine, but the 101 pen drawings in this volume so out-outrage his usual work that they could not appear in the journals that usually run his work. — N.

Or is it a traffic hazard?

A rose is a rose — or is it?

HIS JOB — LEGAL OR ILLEGAL?
Staff Photo

A Municipal Court trial has been set in Long Beach for Tuesday that may determine if selling roses on the center dividers of busy intersections—a business that has blossomed into a big success—is permissible or unsafe and against the law.

The defendant is Harold E. Pries, 21, a driver for James E. Porter, a Hawthorne businessman who owns Youth Enterprises, a firm through which he employes about 18 young men.

Pries is a driver for Porter who transports the young salesmen and their bouquets. He's accused—on five counts—of not having a valid city license and not having a photograph on his license.

EACH COUNT carries a maximum penalty of six months in jail and a fine of up to $500.

A number of citizens have called the Long Beach police to complain about the "traffic hazard" the vendors create and to express concern for the safety of the young men, Sgt. Jim Reed said.

Robert E. McNulty, a Torrance attorney representing Porter, however, says "we personally think there is someone who doesn't want these kids selling flowers—they do take a lot of business away from the stores."

McNulty accused the police of "trying to drive them out of business."

Deputy Chief Maurice Z. Woshon, however, replied that "we haven't got time to harass them. We want to look out for their safety and make sure they don't impede traffic."

THERE IS NO LAW that specifically prohibits someone from selling merchandise from a center divider, Sgt. Reed noted, but the police can decide if the salesman is creating a traffic hazard.

Several of the youngsters have been so cited, said McNulty, but most of the citations have been dismissed by juvenile court referees.

"We ask them (the young salesmen) to stand where it's reasonable," the lawyer said, "and they don't hurt anyone."

The legal situation rounding the rose salesmen is "a hodgepodge" of conflicting laws administered by the federal, state and city governments, a representative of the state Labor Commission said.

The young men interviewed were in agreement for their reason for taking the job: money. They work four hours a day and are paid a minimum of $2 an hour.

Mike Ladd, 18, of South Gate, noted two other advantages:

"You don't have to cut your hair or wear a tie."

Transportation said key need of senior citizens

Transportation is the major need — other than money — of Orange County's senior citizens.

A preliminary report of a study done by the Orange County Council on Aging disclosed that the majority of the 137,295 "senior citizens" over age 60 live in 10 areas of the county which are not generally linked with transportation facilities.

Many elderly people cannot drive because of failing health or poor vision, and many others are afraid of venturing out because of unfamiliarity with their surroundings or because of confusion and fear of "getting lost," the survey found.

It is attempting to fix, in order of priorities, the needs of the senior citizens, according to Mancy Connors, project director.

She said the study disclosed that 11 per cent of the seniors are living at standards below the "poverty level," and that most in this category clustered in Santa Ana, Anaheim and Costa Mesa. There were others in this category in Orange-Tustin area, Huntington Beach and the Fullerton-Brea-La Habra areas in the north county. Other groupings of the elderly were located in the Newport Beach-Irvine area, Seal Beach, Laguna Hills and San Juan Capistrano-San Clemente area.

Addition to water district stirs Orange Co. controversy

Conflict developed Saturday over recent approval by Orange County's Local Agency Formation Commission of the addition of 22,400 acres of ranch land to the Santa Margarita Water District.

The Orange County Grand Jury, whose objections were brushed aside by LFC directors, contended there is a lowering water table on the ranch properties and that at least one of two industrial plants will step up its water demands.

Both Philco-Ford's Aeronutronic and Thompson Ramo Wooldridge have rocket test sites on the property annexed, and TRW recently received a new government contract which will call for an additional 100,000 gallons of water daily.

The grand jury said it understood much of the territory was due for development, and protested that there was no environmental impact report filed with LAFC.

Of the total acreage, 17,300 acres are in an agricultural preserve which earns tax considerations from the county. This land is owned by Richard O'Neill, head of Rancho Mission Viejo and the Mission Viejo Co.

Tom Blum, a company vice president, said the ranch land is "tied up" with agricultural production for 10 years or more and that there are no development plans. But the Environmental Coalition, a group of organizations interested in conservation and ecology, held that the annexation would lead to urban development.

In the opinion of the directors of Santa Margarita Water District, this is the major aim of the annexations.

They told the grand jury that "the major reason for the proposal (of annexation) if that the territory to be annexed lacks sufficient local water for anticipated development."

Blum explained that, since there will be no urbanization, there will be no need for an environmental impact report.

The grand jurors, however, reminded that state law says that "an EIR on any project must deal with the secondary impact of a project if that impact is to be greater than the initial one."

In its view, " 'anticipated development' " would be a secondary impact of the proposed annexation," and it "should be spelled out in some detail."

Rare birds delay phone line laying

The light footed clapper rail, an endangered species of bird, is alive and well in the Upper Newport Bay estuary, thanks in part to Pacific Telephone.

Crews laying new cables, more than four inches in diameter and loaded with thousands of voicepaths for servicing new telephone installations, worked their way to both sides of the marshy estuary—and stopped because the birds were there — on their nests.

This month will end the nesting season for the small, long-billed marshbirds, and a spokesman for Pacific Telephone said the decision was reached to delay linking the cables until the domestic affairs of the birds are settled.

A few dozen of the sprightly rails make the Upper Bay estuary their home; a few dozen more are found at the U.S. Navy Weapons Station at Seal Beach, now designated as a wildlife preserve. With a few more in the San Diego area, that completes the census of the bird listed by the U.S. Department of the Interior as endangered species.

PACIFIC PARK IN SANTA ANA . . . condominiums for adults

IN SANTA ANA

Pacific Park homes starting at $15,950

Pacific Park Homes, a Mattwood Property Development Corporation project in Santa Ana, offers condominium homes priced as low as $15,950, yet providing all of the advantages of condominium conversion ownership.

Three floor plans are offered at Pacific Park, which is an all-adult community.

Prices of the homes range from $15,950 to $19,950, with conventional financing terms available. The one and two-story homes offer two or three bedrooms, 1½ baths and up to 1,260 square feet of living space.

The 84-unit, $1.5 million project covers 3.2 acres at the corner of S. Pacific Avenue and St. Gertrude Place in Santa Ana. It is one block west of Bristol Street and one block north of Warner Avenue.

Rod Roesch, president of the Mattwood corporation, explained some of the reasons for the low prices at Pacific Park: "Since the units were already in existence when we bought the project, many of today's soaring construction costs were avoided.

"Expensive landscaping costs were also virtually eliminated since complete landscaping had already been installed and maintained.

"In addition to these advantages," Roesch continued, "since the project was built when land and building costs were lower, the units are less densely clustered and the interiors are larger than in a comparably priced new construction project."

THERE ARE two different two-story plans in the project, one with two bedrooms and one with three. The single-story, two-bedroom plan is a second level home located over the parking. Each plan has 1½ baths, living room, kitchen and dining area.

Special features of the homes include shag carpeting, draperies, wall air conditioning units, built-in tv and telephone outlets, gas range and oven with range hood, light and exhaust fan, garbage disposal, ceramic tile countertops, marbelene pullmans and extra storage space in the carport.

The community's recreation facilities include a large entertainment room, meeting room and pool.

LOCATED only one mile north of the South Coast Plaza shopping center, Pacific Park has convenient freeway access to all of the many attractions or Orange County, including Disneyland, Knott's Berry Farm, Anaheim Stadium, Japanese Village, numerous golf courses, parks, satellite shopping areas, educational centers, and Southern California's beaches.

Churches of all faiths, as well as civic, cultural and fraternal organizations are located in the surrounding area. Employment opportunities are highlighted by the nearby and continually expanding Irvine Industrial Complex.

Hillcrest Mortgage Company is providing long term financing for buyers, including a 5 per cent-down plan. A home trade plan is also available through sales counselors Walker & Lee.

The sales office is located at 2101 S. Pacific Avenue, just south of St. Gertrude Place. The sales office and models are open daily from 10 a.m. to dusk.

Huge condominium set for Signal Hill

A $1,250,000 condominium development, the first such development for Signal Hill, will be built on 19th Street between Stanley and Molino Avenues.

According to real estate broker Richard Buenger of Buenger Enterprises, a spokesman for the development group, "the Signal Hill Condominiums will consist of 27 adult condominium homes priced from $26,900 to $53,700. Construction will begin immediately with completion scheduled for later this year."

According to the Signal Hill City Administrator, Fred Baxter: "This development is certainly in keeping with the initial emphasis of our new master plan for the community. We want to see high quality, attractive residential buildings in our city, and are enthused with the architectural and landscaping plans for the Signal Hill Condominiums."

THE master-planned residential community will consist of two three-story buildings with individual subterranean enclosed parking garages, landscaped rooftop gardens and outdoor entertainment areas.

Located on the grounds will be a large, heated and night-lighted swimming pool, a health and exercise gymnasium, sauna, hydrotherapy pool, and a game room. Each apartment home will have a private balcony or patio.

Many will have outstanding views of the greater Long Beach area, the Queen Mary, the Pacific Ocean, Catalina, and the Palos Verdes Peninsula. Landscaping will consist of natural contouring over the 15 per cent slope of the property, and the extensive use of trees, greenery and colorful, sweet-smelling shrubs and flowering plants.

ACCORDING to the architect, William Earl Tickell Jr. of Long Beach, "Our architectural objective was to create a dignified living environment using natural materials and interesting configurations of space . . . oriented to the views and coolness of the ocean.

The Signal Hill Condominiums are to be of contemporary design grouping modular units in such a way as to create the intimacy of private gardens and decks.

This provides each individual apartment home with a feeling of elegant seclusion."

Tickell said materials will consist of "rough hewn wood, concrete, stucco and glass, which will be left to weather into organically harmonious tones and shades, weathering naturally and requiring little exterior maintenance. The structures will appear to grow upon the land, an organic blending of hillside and home."

ONE and two-bedroom homes will be available ranging in size from 740 sq. ft. to 1270 square feet. Sunken living rooms and solar glass windows will be features.

There will be two elevators in the complex, and all units will have many options such as hardwood floors or wall-to-wall carpeting. Buyers may have the assistance of the interior design team of Tickell Designs headed by Mark Tickell.

Decorator kitchens will feature color-coordinated accessories.

Buenger Enterprises, with offices in Los Angeles and Orange County, will be the exclusive sales agent for the new development and representatives will be on site.

Park Place 'last six' in Cerritos in offering

Award-winning Ponderosa Homes is offering its last six Park Place single-family residences in the City of Cerritos, according to Fred Dodd, project sales manager.

"Families looking to move to larger residences during the summer can't beat these spacious Park Place homes for six of the best buys available anywhere," said Dodd.

Priced from $46,990 to $48,990, the remaining homes range in size from 2,327 to 2,792 square feet. "And we offer excellent financing," added Dodd.

Two plans are available:

The Hoover, plan 363, features one bedroom and one full bath downstairs, plus three bedrooms and two full baths on the second floor. The downstairs bedroom is suitable for use as a den or guest room. The Hoover also features two fireplaces—one in the family room, the other in the master bedroom.

IN PLAN 364, THE ROOSEVELT, a unique conversation firepit separates the living room from the formal dining room. The kitchen is accessible to both dining and family rooms. Powder room and utility room complete the lower level.

In addition to four bedrooms and two full baths upstairs, the Roosevelt offers a large, finished bonus room over the garage.

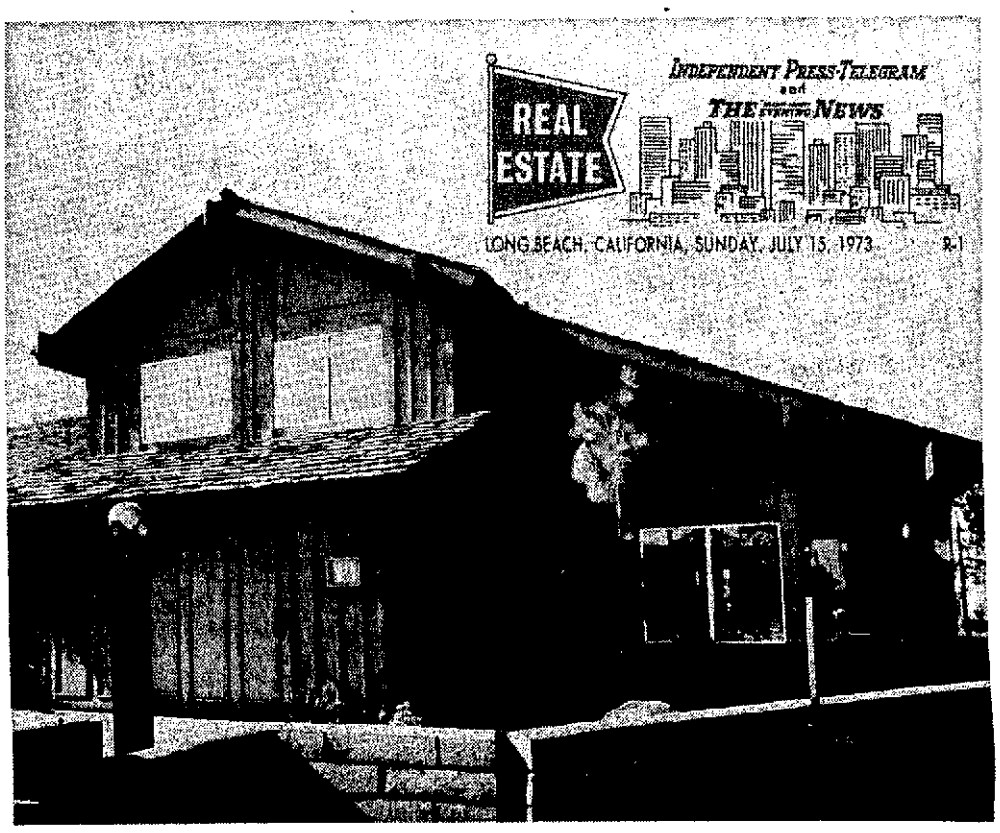

Each home comes in a choice of three exterior elevations. Standard features include cast iron tubs and sinks, copper water lines, ceiling and sidewall insulation, ceramic tile countertops, self-cleaning double ovens, nylon shag carpeting, rear-yard block wall fencing, long-life concrete driveways and shake or cedar shingle roofs.

"FAMILIES MOVING TO PARK PLACE have the advantage of being within walking distance of an 80-acre park which provides acres of picnic grounds, sports fields, hking trails, meeting halls and all kinds of recreational activities," Dodd pointed out.

"Most importantly, this beautiful regional park assures Park Place home owners that there will always be beauty and greenery around the community."

Conveniently located near schools, shopping, churches, municipal services and recreation facilities, Park Place may be reached via the Artesia freeway (Highway 91) to the Carmenita turn-off, south on Carmenita to South Street, and west one-half mile to 19002 S. Vickie Avenue, Cerritos.

The sales office and furnished models are open daily from 10 a.m. until dusk.

S & S CONSTRUCTION'S COMMUNITY

3 lifestyles at Cypress Village

Cypress Village, S & S Construction's master-planned residential community combining three distinct forms of housing, has opened three new units in each of its separate programs totalling 259 townhomes, patio homes, and single-family residences.

The first units of Village Gardens and Village Greens have opened, with 111 townhomes and 58 patio homes available, respectively.

College Park, the segment of Cypress Village featuring conventional single-family homes, has opened its fifth unit, representing 90 residences.

The three programs are adjacent to one another in the overall development, while each utilizes separate sales office facilities and model home complexes. The $50 million community is the latest development in the area by S & S, principal subsidiary of Shapell Industries, Inc.

"Since our recent grand opening, we have experienced a tremendous response from the homebuying public to our community concept," said Mark Bader, S & S general sales manager.

"We have designed Cypress Village to meet the particular needs of all types of homebuyers and, judging from our sales record so far, this has been proven successful."

When completed, the entire Cypress Village development will feature a total of 1,113 living units, consisting of 485 townhomes, 196 patio homes, and 432 single-family homes.

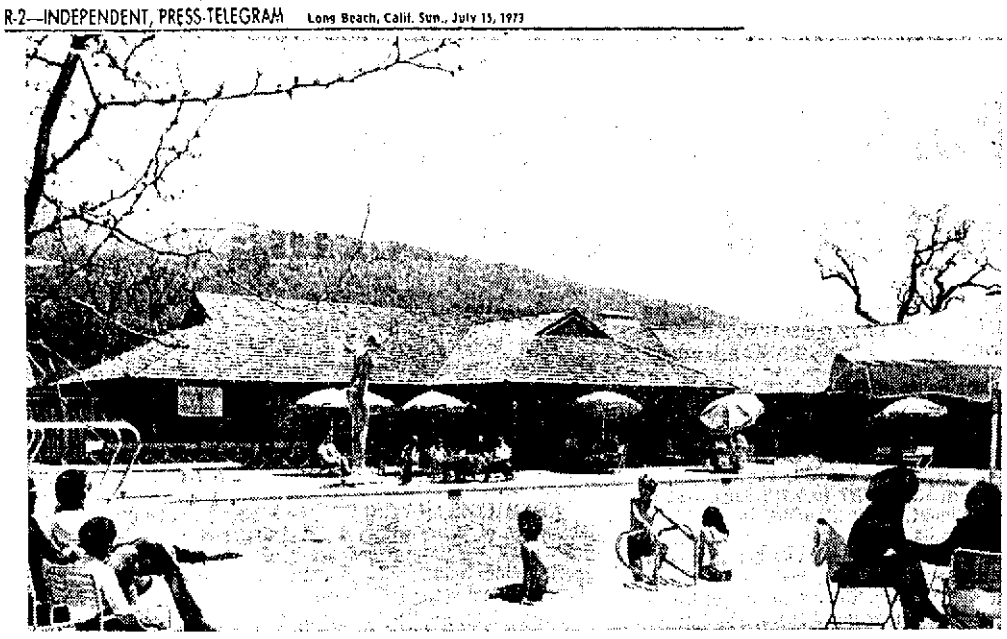

At Village Greens, six decorator-furnished, detached patio home models are on display, priced from $36,450 to $48,950 and built of genuine lath and plaster construction. Eight townhome models are open at Village Gardens, ranging from $31,950 to $38,950. Both communities feature separate recreational facilities for residents' use; all units have been designed for maintenance-free living.

College Park homes, available in eight models priced from $43,950 to $54,950, offer genuine lath and plaster construction and luxury-oriented amenities. These include extensive use of interior and exterior stonework, natural stone or brick fireplaces, ceramic tile in kitchen and bath areas, marble pullmans, and hand-finished natural wood cabinetry.

BEAR VALLEY SPRINGS HAS CLUB SETTING

Swimming, just plain relaxing in country club setting at Bear Valley Springs comes easy. Resort community last month went all out with Parade of Champions, marking opening of summer season of activities for all ages, as well as official opening of resort's golf course.

Oceana South sales pass $4 million mark

Sales at Oceana South, Oceana Land Company's all-adult planned development community in Oceanside, have passed the $4 million mark, according to sales director Jim Davis.

"We now have added 85 second and third unit sales to the sold out 76-home first phase for a total sales volume of more than $4 million," Davis said. "Sales have been progressing at the rate of about one a day lately, so I expect the second unit to be sold out shortly."

Prices of the homes in the community range from $23,495 to $31,995, with excellent conventional financing terms available. When completed, the community will total 303 homes on 48 acres. The total value will be more than $7.5 million.

Second unit buyers are scheduled to move in during September, with third unit buyers following in early 1974.

ACTIVE adult recreation is one of the main attractions of the community, which features a host of recreational activities.

"The fact that this is an adult community doesn't mean that one has to be retired to live here and enjoy it," Davis said. "On the contrary, Oceana South has been designed for active adults.

"Even if one does happen to be retired from his job, there is plenty to keep him busy right here in the community."

In addition to the financial security of owning their own homes, residents are freed from maintenance chores by the condominium concept of landscaping and maintenance, under which a professional firm does all of those chores.

THE ADDED free time provided by this style of life enables residents to take advantage of the many recreational facilities offered in the community.

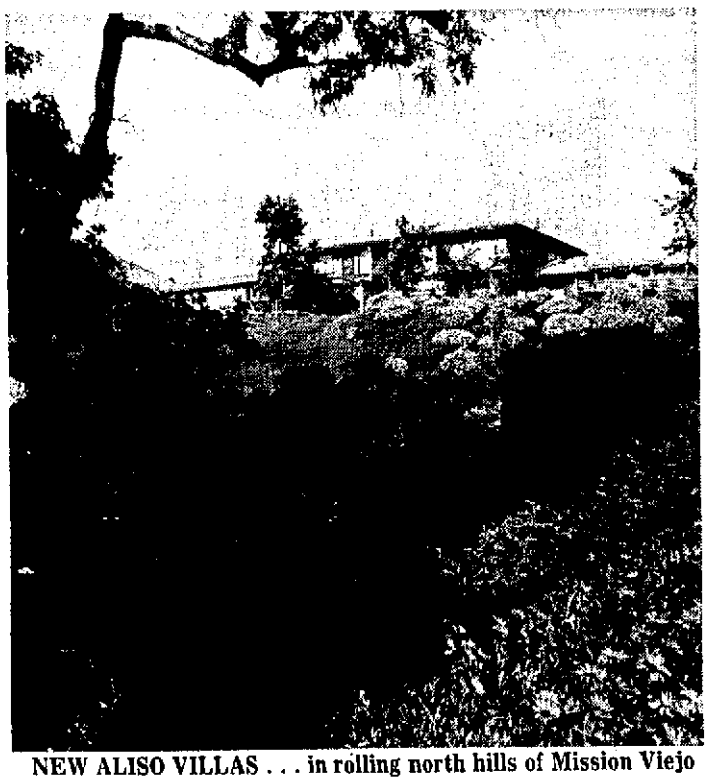

Each phase has its own separate and complete recreational center with large entertainment room, fireplace, well-equipped kitchen, pool room, 20x40 foot swimming pool, jacuzzi, and shuffleboard courts.

The all-adult nature is preserved by the requirement that at least one permanent resident of each household must be at least 40 years of age. No children under 16 may live in the community.

Two floorplans are offered at Oceana South, with two bedrooms, 1½ or two baths, spacious living room-dining room complex, kitchen, oversized garage and attached carport.

SPECIAL features include built-in dishwasher and garbage disposal, double stainless steel sink, range with self-cleaning windowed oven, Wilson Art counter tops and vinyl floor covering.

Visitors may reach the homesite from the San Diego Freeway or Highway 395 by taking Highway 78 to El Camino Real, then going north to Mesa Drive and east to Pear Tree Lane and the beautifully furnished models.

NEW ALISO VILLAS . . . in rolling north hills of Mission Viejo

At Mission Viejo

New Aliso Villas in grand opening

Mission Viejo Company is having a grand opening for New Aliso Villas, a country-oriented condominium project in the rolling northern hills of the Orange County community.

The 220-home, $6 million neighborhood was added to the development plans of the company when its predecessor, Aliso Villas, which was scheduled to be phased out, stimulated many additional sales.

Offering the equivalent of a home with a pool for as low as $21,995, New Aliso Villas are being built on a high ridge north of Los Alisos Boulevard.

Planned within the new development is a community pool and cabana area, the second to be located in Aliso Villas.

A new elementary school is planned adjacent to the development, and the new regional shopping center at El Toro is a short drive away.

A TOTAL of 400 units, valued at more than $8-million, have been sold in the original Aliso Villas neighborhood, since the project opened late in 1971.

The New Aliso Villas neighborhood will be located adjacent to a new 18-acre natural community park.

Tom Valentine, director of operations, planned unit developments, said the villas will appeal particularly to families seeking an attractive place to live at a reasonable price, with plenty of recreational facilities for both parents and children.

He noted that the zero maintenance way of life is especially appealing to buyers who want to own a home, but still want time to enjoy their leisure.

MANY buyers in the original Aliso Villas are single people with a relatively high level of income, who prefer to live in a community which offers a wide variety of recreational activities.

New Aliso Villas offers many attractive features. A dishwasher, shag carpeting in living room, hall, and master bedroom and exterior wall insulation are included at no extra cost.

Each unit features oversized forced air duct work, and all rough electrical and plumbing lines to accommodate convenient hook-up for optional air conditioning.

Both one and two story floor plans are being offered. Two and three bedrooms and one and two bath models are available.

Walk-in closets are featured in all models, and two models have step-down living rooms.

ALL UNITS have sliding glass doors opening onto either patios or sundecks, a private entry and enclosed garage. Each home has its own separate, private utility area.

Landscaping, home exteriors and common facilities are maintained by the community for a modest monthly fee.

Attractive Conventional financing is available.

"Cypress Village offers a home for every size family to fit any budget," Bader said. "Village Greens patio homes offer detached units midway in size and price between College Park homes and Village Gardens townhomes.

"In addition to the convenience offered to prospective homebuyers, the master plan of Cypress Village accents family living, with on-site recreational facilities, a city park, bicycle trails, and greenbelt areas."

EXCLUSIVE features included in the price of every townhome and patio home are wall to wall carpeting throughout, vinyl tile flooring, complete exterior wall and ceiling insulation, all electric kitchens with dishwasher, ceramic tile, cultured marble pullmans, and custom cabinetry.

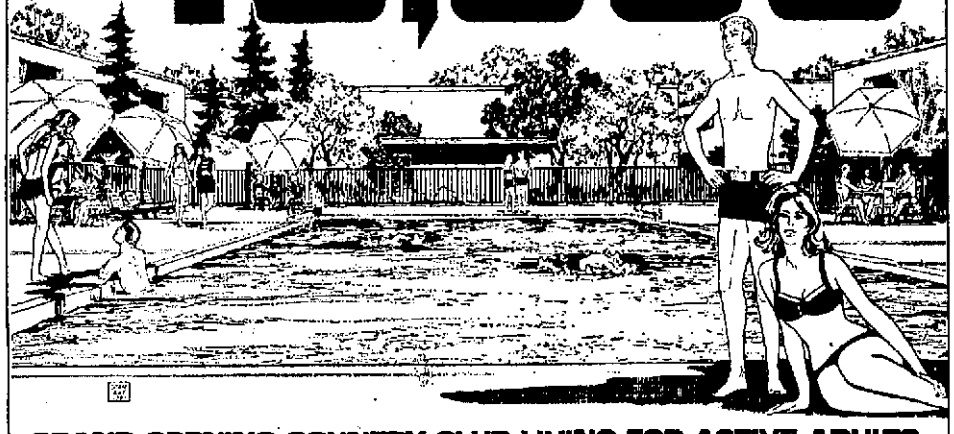

Wood shingle roofing and automatic garage door openers are standard features at the Greens, while concrete tile roofs and enclosed garden patios are offered at the Gardens.

Individual, fully-equipped private clubhouses are featured at both Village Greens and Village Gardens.

To reach Village Greens, turn left at Orangewood to the model complex at 6674 Vinal Haven Court. College Park is west on Valley View, just north of Orangewood.

WHAT'S YOUR PROBLEM?

Some commercial property not suited for retail shops

By DON CAMPBELL

We get older and a surprising thing happens—not only does our appearance change with age, but, in many cases, so do our habits. The late riser suddenly develops an affinity for getting up with the birds.

The man who spent the first 30 years of life almost living on pizza realizes, with a start one day, that he can't stand the sight of the stuff.

MR. CAMPBELL:

I've held a piece of real estate in a commercial area for a long, long time—paying taxes on it, putting it up for sale from time to time (no luck), but never doing anything with it, otherwise.

The thought has occurred to me that—since it fronts on a pretty busy street and is already zoned for commercial use—it would make an ideal place for four or five small retail shops. The property is deep enough for parking in front and, as I say, the street gets a lot of traffic.

What sort of an arrangement do you think I should approach the bank with in seeking a construction loan for this development? Mr. W.W.P. (Indianapolis, Ind.)

ANSWER: I hate to throw wet blankets around with such gay abandon, but I have the horrible feeling that you're not going to be able to get the bank to buy any arrangement for this sort of venture.

What you are describing is a strip shopping center and they were the cat's meow for several years after World War II. Now—unless the location is a whale of a lot more attractive than you have described it—I doubt if any bank will touch it with a 10-foot pole.

Why? Well, for one thing, the strip shopping center was never a very good idea, even in its heyday. They invariably created traffic congestion, both in their own parking areas and in the street that they fronted.

But, more importantly, the public's shopping habits simply changed. No longer was the shopper content to drive to one little center, pick up an item or two, and then drive to a second one, and then to a third one. He preferred to drive a little farther and find a shopping center with plenty of convenient parking and, not four or five shops, but 30, 50 or 75 retail establishments.

I don't like to be so pessimistic — and, of course, I could also be dead wrong—but I don't think you're going to find the bank sharing your enthusiasm.

One thought for your digestion: Would the property lend itself to the construction of a professional building of some sort, such as a medical or dental clinic?

MR. CAMPBELL:

I assume that the FHA mentioned in one of your recent columns must mean Federal Housing Authority. I haven't inquired into these things until recently, and I actually don't know what 235 stands for. Forgive my ignorance.

I have about $1,000 that I would like to use—all or partly—as a down payment on a home. It could be a one-bedroom, but not more than two and, preferably with some kind of city transportation. I have thought of buying a trailer, but would really prefer a home. What would be the very best buy in a home for $1,000 as a down payment? Mrs. H.N. (Phoenix, Ariz.)

ANSWER: Don't apologize for anything—government bureaucracy is, by its nature, so confusing that most people are in the same boat. Yes, FHA stands for Federal Housing Authority and 235 is simply the number that someone slapped on one particular program. FHA 235 was designed to permit low-income families to pay only $200 down on a house, with a mortgage of up to 40 years on which Uncle Sam pays the interest charges down to 1 per cent.

The only trouble with the 235 program is that it is spotty—in some parts of the country money for it is entirely missing and, in others, it is available and some builders are putting up houses meeting the FHA's requirements. I don't know what the situation is, now, but at one time—in your city (Phoenix)—National Housing Industries was actively engaged in this program.

MR. CAMPBELL:

With all of the crime in the street in our major cities, why doesn't somebody introduce a law that would require all apartment building owners to maintain doormen on duty, 24 hours a day? Mrs. P.J. (Boston, Mass.)

ANSWER: Unfortunately, you're talking about a tremendously expensive proposition—a minimal payroll of at least four or five men (three plus at least one to substitute on days off). Someone is going to have to pay for it. And guess who that someone would be. If you can afford to pay for it, of course, then apartments with 24-hour doorman service are certainly available in every large city.

But, let's face it: For every apartment where it might prevent a crime, there would be 10 others where a doorman would be completely unnecessary.

MR. CAMPBELL:

You made a statement in one of your recent columns concerning a man who was thinking of reinvesting some money he had in mutual funds, and who asked you about buying a duplex or a quad. You made the comment that "these aren't really very good investments under the best of circumstances . . ."

Do you feel rental property is a bad investment for everyone? Your comments appear to indicate this. Why?

We have two doubles — one new, and one 17 years old. They have virtually been our salvation financially, especially during a bad job situation in which they both provided income. We live almost rent free due to these buildings and are, quite frankly, happy to have them. I might comment that we purposely furnish very little (i.e. no stoves and refrigerators, air conditioners, or other mechanical items that would tend to break down) and we still have our choice of tenants. We also do the bulk of our own painting and minor maintenance which also helps. — Mr. R.L.W. (Lebanon, Ind.)

ANSWER: I keep getting beaten around the ears with everything at hand when I say that single family houses, doubles, quads and similar rental units are a bad investment. Now, obviously, a whale of a lot of people do extremely well buying these income-producing properties and wouldn't have it any other way. Fine! But it still doesn't change the situation. In the classic meaning of "investment" (the outlay of money in the anticipation of profit), such income property is a bad investment in terms of the ratio between risk and return, and the amount of effort that's required to get that return.

Mr. R.L.W. is happy in his position as the landlord of two doubles and I, in turn, am happy for him. But consider: Both the units are new, or near-new, and haven't required major maintenance; Mr. R.L.W. is obviously handy and saves money this way; most importantly, the units are obviously located in a city with a shortage of rental housing. How do we know this? By virtue of the fact that he is able to keep his tenants without providing them with stoves, refrigerators, air conditioners," or other mechanical items that would tend to break down." Fine! But in my part of the country, you have to throw in the first month's rent free to catch a prospective renter's attention.

It's largely a matter of what turns you on. The fact that Mr. R.L.W. and his wife live almost rent free due to these buildings loses a little of its punch when you realize that — with the same amount of investment in other income-producing ventures — Mr. R.L.W. could also be living "almost rent free" without having to get up in the middle of the night to fix somebody's plumbing.

MR. CAMPBELL:

A foreclosure was handled for us last Feb. by our title company which reported that $933.88 was paid for taxes in the first half of 1971-72. We felt assured the taxes were current.

On inquiring at the county tax office, I learned that over $1,000 is due on taxes. No taxes have been paid at all.

ANSWER: I think that I'd remind the title company that it is getting paid to keep the books in order, and that if you wanted the thing fouled up you are quite capable of doing THAT, yourself.

Tell the title company to get off its duff, pay the taxes and penalties due, and shape up or ship out.

DESIGN FOR PEOPLE

Light color expands space

By EMILY MALINO

If you're one of those fortunate few who have lucked out with high-ceilinged rooms, treasure every blessed inch of height, because height can stretch even small spaces.

But if you have a room that is too tall for its length and width, you could have a problem.

The most persistent hang-up with super-height is finding the right furniture to go with it.

Almost all contemporary furnishings are low, designed to go with the prevailing eight-foot ceilings of modern construction methods.

Finding tall things can often be a chore; in another column I will talk about how to track down tall things on a shoe string.

But most people today who move into an old house with high ceilings or a new house with a two-story high ceiling already own their basic furniture and must look for other solutions for these swanky spaces.

THE OBVIOUS place to look, if you already have your basics, is the space itself and here the elementary guidelines of space and color are important to recall.

Dark colors stretch space; light colors expand it. Every woman knows that she looks thinner in black and white. So experiment with spin-offs of this basic rule in dealing with super-ceilings.

In one living-room I designed, the ceiling was 13 feet high and yet had the normal square footage of living space.

A splendid giant chaise and a stylish basic love seat were too handsome and costly to discard, though both were under 30 inches high. Even two reasonably tall windows looked low in relation to the ceiling.

With a very plain oak strip floor, I decided to bring the sky down by marrying it to the ground.

I applied prefinished dark oak flooring to the ceiling and then stained the natural floor to match it.

WITH THE linear dark pattern, the two parallel surfaces are brought closer together and relate far better to small room dimensions, even making the owner's low-slung furniture acceptable in scale.

To further the union of these two far-away planes, a storage wall was constructed at one end of the room with cabinets and a work surface below and shelving for books and plants and collectibles above.

The white shelves and storage units act as a crisp background, silhouetting the objects on each shelf which take the eye up and over the low back of the sofa.

There is never only one way to fool the eye. If you can't afford to floor the ceiling, you can achieve the same effect with inexpensive wood decking, stained the color you want, or even carpet and paint.

USE A strong, dark color if you use carpet; deep brown is a great favorite of mine. Then paint the ceiling something similar, perhaps a few shades darker, as ceilings of rooms always receive less direct or reflected light than floors.

Some folks may object to bare floors, however handsomely they are stained.

For those of you who have this reasonable hang-up but want to match wood ceiling to wood floor, you can soften things up by adding a long, narrow rug alongside the furniture, thus leaving ample flooring and at the same time, creating a walking aisle from one end of the room to the other.

Flooring the ceiling can be an expensive way to lower it, but it comes to a good deal less bread than replacing all your current furniture, and it's an easy way to bring scale to misshapen space.

Improvements as investment eyed

Some home improvements are better investments than others, according to a Crocker Bank officer.

"If you want the best possible return on the money you're spending, concentrate on popular home improvments that boost the home's value," said Robert T. Quinn, vice president of real estate loans in the bank's Southern Counties Region, headquartered in Newport Beach.

Generally, for every dollar spent on building new homes, Americans spend 60 cents constructing patios, converting niches, adding family rooms and overall altering their living quarters, he said.

Westerners now annually spend $302 per family on household improvements, 11 per cent above the national average of $272.

"While the home owner should view the improvement more for its present usefulness than for potential profit, some improvements do give you a better return for your money than others," Quinn said.

"THE TWO most popular remodeling jobs are the bathroom and kitchen," said the Crocker Bank officer. "Last year Americans spent almost $2 billion on professional bathroom and kitchen work.

"Normally, an additional bath is the single biggest improvement to a home, and sometimes the cost can be recovered almost in full," he said. "And chances of recovering your investment on a modernized, efficiently laid-out kitchen are excellent."

He said a third important improvement is general maintenanec, such as painting and roof repair. "After all, the whole concept of a house is shelter. Maintenance keeps the house marketable at all times."

He said more people are taking out home improvement loans now, possibly to ward off rising construction and material costs. Last year Americans spent more than $7 billion on professional contract work for home improvements.

"THE MAIN thing to remember in improving the home is to avoid overbuilding for the area," the banker said. "Adding a swimming pool in a non-swimming pool area is a risky investment. Remodeling should enhance the home without making it difficult to get a price higher than the neighborhood average if you decide to sell."

He said that by adjusting personal preferences to the market place, a person can make desirable improvements in the most economical way.

"If your improvements are what other people also want, you stand to recover much of the cost when you sell the home," said the Crocker Bank officer.

"You also should see what features builders are currently promoting, for that will indicate the improvements that will improve the value of your home.

Trust seen as sound investment

NEW YORK (UPI) — Real estate investment trusts have come of age, according to a leading real estate financier.

"When REITs first began to attract investor attention a few years ago, many analysts felt that their high growth rate was entirely due to the tight money market," says Nils A. Lundberg, president of the national real estate financing firm of Brooks, Harvey & Co., Inc., an associate of Morgan Stanley & Co., Inc.

"Over the past few years we have seen the economy move from an extremely tight money situation through a period when money has been relatively plentiful," Lundberg said. "While the earnings of some trusts slowed, overall, REITs have adjusted well to the changing cost of money and maintained their steady growth.' Trust assets have grown from $1 billion at the start of 1970 to almost $12 billion today."

MANY observers also predicted there would be limited acceptance of the REIT concept because of the complexities of real estate financing. It was thought that the use of such technical terms as "cash flow", "leverage" and "depreciation" would discourage a good many investors.

"Understanding real estate financing is not easy," Lundberg said. "For instance, even some securities analysts had trouble in grasping the fact that while property could be depreciated for tax purposes, its market value, in many instances, was increasing."

However, he said, the amount of information about REITs has proliferated in the past few years and investors now have available a great deal of information on trust operations on which to base their decisions.

Lundberg said publicly owned REITs are more open to scrutiny of their performance than are the stocks of other types of public companies.

S & S-built Le Mans townhomes popular

More than $3 million in sales have been reported at the family-oriented Le Mans townhome community in northern San Diego, one of two new home projects developed in the area by S & S Construction, a subsidiary of Shapell Industries, Inc.

The community recently opened its third and final unit of two, three and four bedroom townhomes, priced from $26,950 to $34,950. Le Mans offers a total of 166 units in distinctive two story and tri-level designs.

"Much of this successful sales record can be attributed to our location, which is a convenient seven minutes from downtown San Diego," stated William Ruzich, marketing and sales director for Shapell Industries of San Diego.

"This location, in addition to the quality construction of the townhomes, makes Le Mans units an exceptional value."

EACH LE MANS townhome features wall-to-wall carpeting throughout, including closet areas, all-electric kitchen with dishwasher and self-cleaning oven, private fenced garden patio, decorator light fixtures, ceramic tiling in kitchen and bath areas, vinyl sheet flooring, and large master bedroom suites.

Most units also offer two-car garages as standard.

"With all exterior maintenance of the units provided by professional crews, Le Mans residents have more time available to them to make use of the varied recreational facilities on the premises," Ruzich said.

A spacious community recreation center features a fireside lounge area and complete kitchen facilities, as well as a large year-round heated swimming pool.

SIX decorator-furnished models are on display at the community, which features proximity to major employment centers, schools, and shopping complexes. Le Mans may be reached by taking Highway 395/163 north to the Genessee East exit, proceeding to the model complex at 7885 Starling Drive.

In addition to Le Mans, S & S has an additional new home community, Encitas Estates, open in the area. Located in Encinitas, the development offers single-family residences priced from $36,950.

S & S Construction's parent firm, Shapell, is one of the nation's largest homebuilders and community developers. Headquartered in Beverly Hills, Shapell is presently active throughout California and in Colorado, with communities in Los Angeles and Orange Counties, Sacramento, San Jose, Stockton, and Denver, as well as the San Diego area.

The company, listed on the New York and Pacific Stock Exchanges, has developed more than 17,000 homes.

Housing executive calls for speed-up in permits

By ROBERT BECKMAN
Real Estate Editor

Delays in the processing of zoning and building permits must come to an end if rising housing costs are to be curtailed, a leading housing industry executive told the Orange County chapter of the Building Industry Association last week.

"Every time a permit application is delayed, the eventual cost of a home goes up — and the homebuyer is the one who has to pick up the inflated tab," said Warren Toman, executive vice president of Grant Corporation, Newport Beach.

"While most of these delays are unintentional, they still add to the cost of development and force the builder to tack on to the price of the home the extra charges for the interest and taxes paid while the land lies dormant," he said.

"Ironically, these delays by local governments inflate the cost of a house at a time the Federal government is doing its utmost to curb inflation."

Toman pointed out that rights of property owners have eroded drastically over the past two decades.

"Today, many a property owner is placed in the position of having to fight government every time he wants to do anything with his land — and that's a position the property owner should not be placed in," he said.

"As of late, the general public has been deceived into thinking that their interests are different from that of business, that what hurts the business community doesn't hurt them.

"This certainly is not true. A good life is based upon a strong economy. And, there's no way to maintain a strong economy without soundly conceived, orderly growth and development," he said.

To help maintain a strong economy, Toman urged public support of the Property Rights Initiative, which was filed in early July by three private citizens who are seeking to qualify it for a statewide vote in 1974.

This initiative would require that governmental agencies impose no restrictions which would harm or diminish the value of property even temporarily without making immediate or just compensation.

"This Property Rights Initiative applies to the owner of a single as well as to a developer owning a large parcel of land and would do much to cut down on the lengthy delays being imposed on building in many areas," Toman said.

"Today, if a homeowner finds that a proposed freeway will go through his property, he must wait two or three years before the State buys the land from him. In the meantime, the odds of him being able to sell the house to anyone else are practically nil," Toman explained.

The initiative also would protect developers against indefinite moratoriums imposed on development while planners are spending long periods of time developing general plans for areas.

"If the city, county, or state decides that a certain parcel of land should be retained as open space, or be developed into a park, then that governmental body should be required to acquire the land immediately at a fair price, not just place restrictions on its development," Toman said.

"Even though the owner can do nothing to improve his property, he still gets his regular property tax bill," he added.

Next tax target

The president of the California State Association of County Assessors feels the next area to be hit by increased taxes will be personal income.

Donald Stewart, who also is Monterey County Assessor, feels the limit has about been reached on sales tax, and property taxes are being subjected to increasing restrictions.

"Property taxes probably will continue as the greatest single source of revenue for local government," Stewart said.

He feels, however, that the ratio of assessed valuation may be lowered from the existing limit of 25 per cent of the market value to perhaps 15 per cent.

"Even with a reduction as large as that, property taxes still probably will be the largest source of government income," he declared.

Stewart said the 6 per cent state sales tax is hard on persons with lower income.

"We all know government has a strong tendency to grow," he added "and thus government seeks new sources of revenue. I think the extreme dependency of local governments on property tax as a source of revenue will lessen, however, and be replaced by increased income taxes.

"Since setting up machinery for local income taxes is a considerable duplication of effort, I think we will see higher state income taxes with larger share being returned to local governments.

News for suckers

Arizona's desert lands are being butchered by subdividers who are peddling marginal or worthless building lots to suckers, charges an article in the July issue of Audubon, magazine of the 260,000-member National Audubon Society.

By promoting a myth of scarcity, according to Audubon environmental writer Gary Soucie, these real estate speculators have been able to "hustle lots on the remotest, wretchedest lands imaginable," at "outrageously inflated prices," often far from any water supply and other services.

And inept preliminary development that is undertaken to give the sites the semblance of liveability, he says, is scarring the desert and its plant communities.

"Well over a million acres of private land in Arizona has been subdivided for sale on the installment plan like so many refrigerators and washing machines," Soucie writes. The land sales are aimed at "naive, often greedy people who think they are making a smart, safe investment in a booming area."

But most who buy "are making the mistake of their lives," for they "will be exceptionally lucky if they manage to recoup their investment during their lifetimes, let alone make a profit."

Only a very few of the remote subdivisions in Arizona will become fully developed in the foreseeable future, says Soucie. "Many more will never see development of any kind."

Heading the list of speculative subdivisions that haven't a ghost of a chance of developing are those in areas that have no water, the Audubon article notes. Thousands of lots have been sold or are being promoted in large subdivisions in the northern part of the state where there isn't any ground water at all.

In some places there isn't a source of water within a hundred miles, according to Philip Briggs, the state's chief hydrologist.

The article points out that Arizona law does not require that there be water on or near a subdivision. And apparently "the counties are willing to approve any subdivision application on the off chance that maybe, just maybe, the developers will find water somewhere and the county's tax ratables will increase," says Soucie.

"Soucie also criticizes the inflated prices sought by some subdividers. They are "utterly artificial and are not related to intrinsic value, supply and demand, or comparative prices for land outside the subdivisions."

"Desert land broken for roads and streets does not heal quickly. Fragile desert plant communities will be uprooted forever. Dust stroms will blight neighboring areas. Desert winds and flash floods will erode the primitive streets into permanent gullies."

Village San Juan sales outpace estimate

The pace of townhome sales at Village San Juan is clearly outpacing the most optimistic estimates recorded at the time the project opened a year ago.

"At that time we were projecting about one townhome sale each five days," said John Stuart, sales and merchandising manager for the Southern California division of U.S. Development Corporation, builder of the $20 million residential complex.

"A recent survey of our records shows the townhomes are, instead, selling at a pace of about one every three days."

Stuart listed a number of factors believed to be playing a part in the unexpectedly strong popularity of the townhomes.

"THE location of the project is certainly to be taken into account. Village San Juan lies directly adjacent to the San Diego Freeway in San Juan Capistrano, yet is surrounded by farmlands and open, rolling countryside.

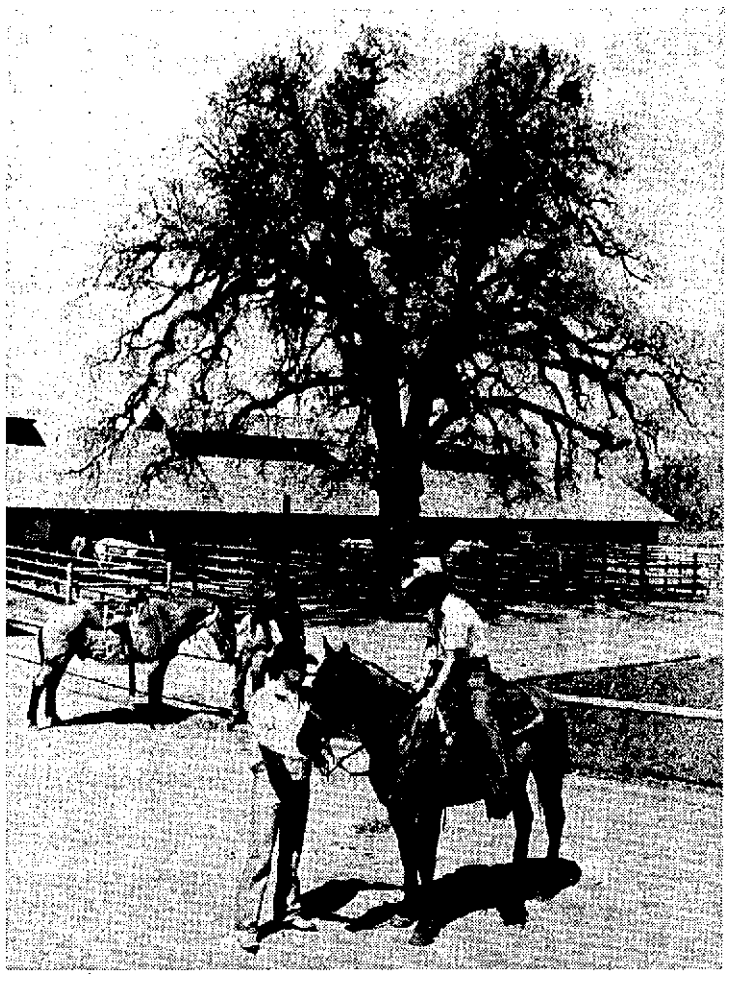

We feel the prices are exceptionally competitive, and the floorplans offer maximum utilization of space while retaining a most attractive residential atmosphere.

"Village San Juan's 3½-acre man-made lake is one of the project's most popular features," Stuart continued. "Its availability for fishing or boating is singularly attractive to residents

"RESIDENTS quickly become used to seeing a neighbor arrive home from work in business suit and tie, only to emerge from his home a few minutes later in sportshirt, jeans and tennis shoes, with fishing pole in hand, headed for a spot of relaxation beside the lake."

Four floorplanes—each with attached garage—are available in the village.

Furnished models are open daily from 10 a.m. until 7 p.m., and may easily be reached by taking the Junipero Serra exit from the freeway and taking the frontage road to the north of the freeway to the community entrance.

La Linda homes one-third sold

La Linda Homes in Fountain Valley are more than one-third sold, with 14 of the 39 homes in the community already accounted for by enthusiastic buyers.

Walker & Lee sales director Emily Blankenship noted five floor plans are available at the site, including the Santa Barbara Plan which won a National Association of Home Builder's Gold Nugget Award in an earlier La Linda Homes development.

Three to six-bedroom homes are featured in single and two-story designs, with up to three baths and three-car garages. Prices range from $36,990 to $45,990, with conventional financing terms available.

Luxury features of the homes include carpeting and draperies, landscaping, fencing, sprinklers and concrete drives. Also complete kitchen built-ins, fireplaces, double entry front doors, forced air heating and exposed beam ceilings.

THE FLOOR plans offered at the project are the same as offered in two earlier La Linda Home communities, both of which met with popular acclaim and both of which were quickly sold out. More than 250 homes were sold in these two communities.

The newest La Linda Homes have a total value of more than $1.75 million. They are located near Mile Square Park, one of Orange County's most popular recreational areas.

The entrance to the community is off Newhope Street between Heil Avenue and Warner Avenue in Fountain Valley.

How to help in water crisis

NEW YORK (UPI) — A nice cold drink of water? Just turn the faucet . . .

Today, just about everywhere, you'll get that clear, refreshing drink. But there may be a day when there just won't be enough water for that quart or two you normally drink each day.

There's a tendency to scoff at the idea of a potable water shortage of such serious proportions it presages a national crisis, but the experts are predicting just that.

Fifty years from now, according to the U.S. Water Resources Council, the minimum national daily water requirement is expected to exceed available supply by 168 trillion gallons — unless we find the means to make more prudent use of our water resources.

Government agencies are working on plans to increase water storage capacities and seeking practical ways to make more waste water reusable. But government and industry efforts and desalinization won't provide the whole solution. People must help.

American-Standard, manufacturer of plumbing fixtures, acknowledges that in the home the toilet is the largest single source of water consumption. Faucets — particularly the leaky kind — are culprits also. But, a toilet doesn't flush itself and a leaky faucet can't repair itself. It's people that waste water.

The United States now uses more than 250 billion gallons of water every day, with the average citizen accounting for about four times his weight, or 60 gallons.

AMERICAN-STANDARD SUGGESTS simple but important ways each family can conserve water in the home — and cut its water bill to boot:

— Use the toilet only for the purpose for which it is intended: sanitary disposal. Flushing cigarettes and facial tissue is extremely wasteful. Equip the bathroom with ashtray and waste basket. More water is saved, American-Standard says, by flushing only when necessary than by using artificial water-saving gimmicks. Conventional toilets are not designed for them. Ploys to reduce volume — bending the ball float rod or inserting a brick in the tank — can backfire.

The only proper way to reduce the amount of water in each flush is to install a toilet that is especially designed to use one-third less water than conventional models, but make sure it conforms to commercial and government sanitary regulations.

— Make sure the flush valve is properly seated after each flush. If water seepage occurs, jiggle the lever until it stops.

— Bathing and showering also can waste water. Partially filled tubs serve just as well as those filled to overflow. Showers require less water than a tub but don't let the water run for a long time before stepping in. If you must dawdle, there is a device which, inserted in the showerarm, cuts water flow about one-third without affecting the spray or cleasing efficiency.

— Hot water in some homes can be obtained only by running the water for several seconds. Electric heating coils can be adapted safely to preheat the water in supply pipes.

— TURN OFF THE WATER when you're not actually using it while shaving, or brushing your teeth, or working around the kitchen sink.

— Whether you wash dishes by hand or machine, do it only once a day when possible. You can save a lot of water — and time.

—When washing the car, use a sponge and a bucket of water with a cleanser. Turn the hose off between rinses.

— When watering the lawn, adjust the sprinkler to a moderately coarse spray to produce efficient watering that won't evaporate as quickly as a fine spray. Make sure the sprinkler is positioned so the water falls on the lawn, not the walk or street.

— Commercial glass cleaners are easier to use and do a better job than water.

— Have the local water supply agency check the pressure of the flow into your home. Sixty pounds per square inch is adequate for most homes, but you may find you have double that. Too much pressure is wasteful, and causes excessive wear on valve seats.

— Finally, check every water outlet for leaks and have them repaired at once. You'd be amazed at how many gallons are wasted each day by that drip, drip, drip . . .

Lusk, Presley YHBC speakers on two crisis

Two crises facing the home building and construction industry—higher interest rates and environment campaigns—will be reviewed by speakers at the monthly dinner meeting of the Young Home Builders Council of the Building Industry Association Monday at the Airporter Inn, 18700 MacArthur Blvd., Irvine, James E. Rodgers, council president, said.

John D. Lusk, president of John D. Lusk & Son, Newport Beach, will present the overall report under the title "New Crises of the Building Industry: Big Environment Campaigns and Upward Spiraling Interest Rates."

Lusk has headed his own major building company since 1946 when he left the banking business. Since that time, the company has built 15,000 homes and currently has under development 1700 acres of business, industrial and residential property, mainly in Orange County.

The dinner program will start at 7 p.m., preceeded by a social hour, said Anthony A. Allen, president of the Grant Company of California, program chairman.

Solomon, Walters reveal new look for El Encanto

A major restoration project aimed at the Catalina Island tourist trade has commenced here on the historic El Encanto, originally the bright Mexican market and play spot of the island in the late 1930s and early 1940s.

El Encanto, at 197 Crescent, near the Casino, has been leased from the Santa Catalina Island Co. by Albert Solomon, president of Sol Vista Homes and owner of Hotel Catalina, and Lee Walters, president of Lee Walters Advertising.

Painting and complete refurbishing has begun on the Early California-styled shopping village and Solomon and Walters plan to re-open the tourist spot July 15 as El Encanto International Market Place.

It will encompass about 25 to 30 internationally-flavored and boutique-oriented shops, as well as a Mexican restaurant, according to the developers.

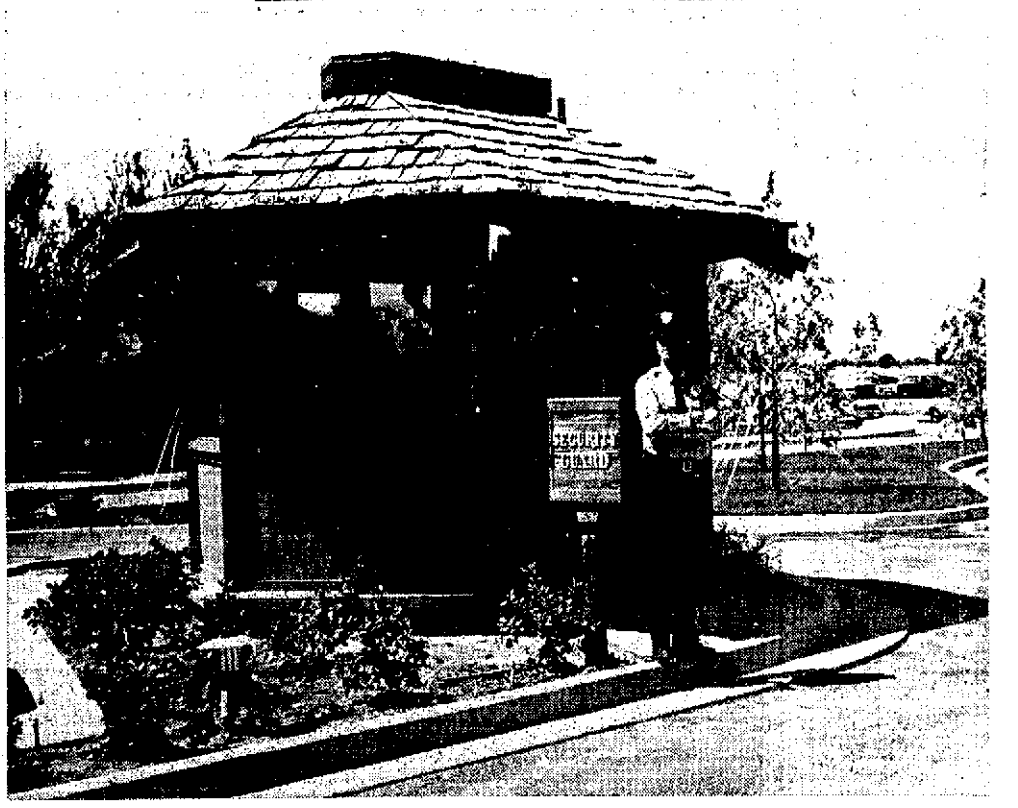

PLANS FOR El Encanto, one of Catalina's most renowned landmarks, include shops involving jewelry, leather goods, shirts, an old-fashioned ice cream and soda pop parlor, candy store, antique boutique, oriental import bazaar, beads and bags, candles, the restaurant and other related tourist attractions.

The hexagon-shaped structure is dominated by a massive Spanish archway emblazoned with vivid Mexican paintings on the ceiling, extensive wrought iron, tile roofs hand-made on Catalina and other Spanish-flavored architectural features.

Inside the archway of the mission-like facility is a landscaped courtyard and all of the shops open onto it. Shops on the beach side have an ocean view.

El Encanto was once the primary shopping village and tourist spot of Catalina Island because of its excellent proximity to the beach, hotels and Casino as well as its "simpatico" environment, Walters said.

"We plan to revitalize the area into the unique attraction that once dominated the island," Walters said. "We think it will help to attract visitors and enhance the image of Catalina Island."

To be called Creek Park Tennis and Swim Series, the development will contain 116 single-family units and 72 townhouses, plus two recreation buildings, two swimming pools and cabanas, two tennis courts, a sand volleyball court, tot lot and an extensive greenbelt area.

"This 38-acre site of rolling terrain has a large canyon in the middle of the property," said Baldwin. "We are making this a greenbelt area and locating the recreation facilities there.

"The different elements of Creek Park will be tied together by similar architecture and extensive landscaping," explained Baldwin.

1st lessee at center revealed

The Dietary Products Division of American Hospital Supply Corp. has become the first lessee in the new 221-acre Orange County Industrial Center, according to Charles Kendall, vice president of Cabot, Cabot & Forbes, developer of the center.

The $525,000 transaction was arranged by Blair Armstrong of Grubb & Ellis of Newport Beach and CC&F's John J. McPhillips, head of marketing for the center.

Construction is set to begin in late August on a 25,000-square-foot warehousing building for the firm which distributes a comprehensive line of equipment and supplies for hospital and institutional food services.

Completion is set for early December. Aberthaw Construction Co. is contractor.

The firm has signed a 10-year lease, with options, for a 69,000-square-foot parcel of land at the corner of Yale and Carriage Streets, just off Harbor Blvd., in Santa Ana.

The parcel is served by Southern Pacific Railroad. Included in the plans is 3,348 square feet devoted to office space and the remainder for expansion of the warehouse.

Authors speak out

THE ART AND SKILL OF SUCCESSFUL NEGOTIATION, by John Ilich. Prentice-Hall, $7.95.

How the author, leading Midwestern attorney, has developed winning methods in real estate transactions is described step-by-step in this 205-page volume.

For those of us who lose more than we win in negotiating, there are helps here whereby we perhaps can build a better batting average.

"Successful negotiation cannot be left to fate, chance, osmosis or some other unrealistic happening. On the contrary, the most skillful negotiators are those who have very definite and refined principles, strategies and techniques working for them," says Ilich.

He tells the methods he has developed in hundreds of disputes involving literally millions of dollars.

The reader will find full details on all rules of conduct, working plans of operation and specific tested tactics designed to secure his objectives while maintaining his own negotiating bases.

The author answers such troublesome questions as deciding the time and place to negotiate, whether or not to have the client present, how to develop negotiation organization and select assistants, the use of correspondence, determining final negotiating authority and disposing of potentially troublesome arguments. — RLB

ENCYCLOPEDIA OF REAL ESTATE FORMS, by Jerome S. Gross. Prentice-Hall, $21.50.

After a long drought, several informative books are being published as aids to those in the field of real estate.

Best of this month's offerings, this oversized volume shows brokers how to meet the challenges of modern legal complexities.

What's the best way for real estate brokers to cope successfully with the growing tangle of real estate laws and regulations? How can they avoid costly court cases and insure that their transactions are the correct ones, in light of the wide variety of options and alternatives now available to them?

Gross, broker and real estate author, supplies an answer to these problems in his new book.

The author provides hundreds of court-tested, ready-to-use real estate forms, along with an exact explanation of their uses and their legal status in different jurisdictions, conveniently divided into twenty-two categories.

Thus, separate chapters are devoted to assignments, bonds, construction contracts, cooperative and condominium agreements, easements, leases, liens, mortgages, options, exchanges and releases and satisfactions.

Special optional clauses in each category enable the reader to tailor any instrument to meet special conditions. — RLB

In Memoriam 30

IN MEMORY OF
WM. C. JAMES JR. (B.J.)
Those of us who were not of Bill's family but knew him, loved him as a man & a very wonderful friend. B.J.'s spirit will live with many of us for a lifetime. B.J. had been given a gift or place in this life by God and did very well with what he had. He shared himself with his fellow man and is remembered as a very good, kindhearted man. He did the very best he could in all his dealings, familywise or any other. Many may feel to the contrary and contradict these words, but those of us that knew and cared about B.J. feel this way about him. Only God really knew B.J. and only God knew the goodness and kindness there was in him. B.J. Loved God in his own way and worshipped Him in his own way. The Lord Our God knew this. B.J. was considerate and good to all those he came in contact with because he knew who needed help and kindness. B.J. had his own way of showing a God given Godliness, which was born in him, as we all are. To some people B.J. did things that we as men feel were not good. But under the circumstance can we as men be judges, for this is for God to judge. So even though he did not meet the approval of some men, God was always with B.J. so who are men on this earth to say B.J. was wrong. He is with God now, we all believe, and he, B.J. is resting in peace. So all any of us can say is that many of us who knew B.J. as a man, have lost a very beautiful friend on earth and now God has taken his own, to Him. One other thing is, we as his friends, believe that B.J. was looking for something here on earth and we all pray that he, B.J. has found that something with his Lord and Master, God the Father Almighty. This is our prayer for William C. James Jr. (B.J.)

Personalized Designer Pattern

Leo Narducci

Leo Narducci has fashioned the perfect dress for warm weather. A 2" wide band is set around the neckline of this sleeveless design; loose bands of the same width start at the upper back, wrap around the front where they cross over and continue on to a 2-button fastening at center back. The slightly gathered skirt joins the fitted bodice, following these same lines. There is a center back zipper. Make it in any soft fabric to enhance the fluid line. Fabric suggestions: linen, cotton, crepe, silks, synthetics, sheer wool, jersey. 71543 is cut in Misses Sizes 8-16. Size 12 requires approximately 3 yards of 45" fabric. EACH pattern $2.00 postpaid. To order71543; send size, name address and zip. Newest Pattern Books: PRINTED PATTERNS; FALL & WINTER DRESSES; COATS, SUITS & ENSEMBLES; COCKTAIL & EVENING DRESSES; SPRING & SUMMER DRESSES; SEPARATES, SPORTSWEAR & MISCELLANEOUS; SEW SPEEDY; MATURE & HALF SIZES; PANTS BOOK — with 37 styles and alteration directions. # Day at zoo is for kids

Text by Dianne Smith

ONE boy wasn't sure the animals were friendly, so he shied away from a sheep.

ZOO visitor expressed her displeasure with goat's eating her cookie.

LITTLE girl bent down to offer feed to one of several goats wandering free at Children's Zoo.

AFTER climbing ledge to get closer look at goat, this little boy seemed unsure of whether to pet the animal or not.

"What happens if you get lost at the zoo?"

"The zoo man takes care of you just like the animals."

With that question and answer from 5-year-olds, 70 youngsters from the three Long Beach Day Nurseries spent a day at the Los Angeles Zoo, hosted by Rick Rackers, junior auxiliary to Assistance League of Long Beach.

The children, most of whom will enter kindergarten in the fall, were bused to the Griffith Park facility accompanied by Rick Racker members, Mrs. Howard Weyker and Mrs. Charles Boyer, their teachers and Evelyn Keeley, director of the nurseries.

"We're going to the zoo, we're going to the zoo," was the chant as they boarded the big blue buses. One child seemed to sum up the impending visit with the observation, "we're going to see the animals and the animals are going to see us."

Everything seems bigger when you're only 5 years old, especially when viewed from above it all on a bus. One curious rider at first sight of the huge park complex, queried, "Is this the Grand Canyon?"

How to overcome job ghetto

FIRST IN A SERIES

EDITOR'S NOTE: According to the writer, "The real authors of this series are the successful women who provided the answers to the questions that other women ask." This material is exerpted from "Everything a Woman Needs to Know to Get What She's Worth," to be published by David McKay Company, Inc.

In describing how the series came about, the author says, "It grew out of a course titled 'The Female Job Ghetto' that I conducted at the Center for New York City Affairs of the New School for Social Research in the fall of 1972.

"The information is for women who work — and 33 million do. This series is for women who want to be paid what they are worth. Most women work for less.

"This series provides tactics for dealing with the subtle, omnipresent and unique obstacles women face in demonstrating their competence and in dealing with the male-oriented job world."

By CAROLINE BIRD

Why does a woman need special tactics to get paid what she's worth?

There are still some men, and women too, who have outdated notions. Not too long ago, a bright young woman, trained as a systems analyst, was sent by her company to consult at a customer's data-processing department. The client/manager met her at the door and said, "You might as well turn right around and go on back to your office. Your fee is $20 an hour, and no woman is worth that much — standing up."

ISN'T IT ENOUGH for a woman to be very good at what she does?

Successful women really believe so, but they don't realize how much of their success comes from the way they manage their competence. Almost everybody knows some dedicated woman who works twice as hard and is twice as good as anybody else in sight and who winds up with nothing but grief for her efforts. A woman who wants to get paid what she's worth can learn a lot by analyzing what the dedicated martyrs do wrong.

Mary Jones — that's not her name — has a responsible job in one of the big federal regulatory agencies. Everyone admits she is not only competent, but sometimes brilliant at interpreting and enforcing the complex regulations she administers. Her work takes her all over the country, and although she exercises considerable power over businessmen, they universally respect her fairness as well as her competence.

Many of them add that they find her easier to deal with than the younger men who do the same job. Mary gets A for diligence and excellence from her colleagues in Washington, too. She always volunteers for the knottiest problems, takes them home to study, and comes up with creative solutions. She is a perfectionist. Rather than tolerate the sloppiness of the secretarial services available in her agency, she types the reports herself. During the 20 years she has spent in the federal service she has taken all the advanced training and professional degrees available under Civil Service educational leave and reimbursement plans, so she has a far more impressive professional background than the young men on her level. She is the senior professional in her category, and ought to be the head of the department.

INSTEAD, she has suffered every form of discrimination of which feminists complain. She has been passed over for promotion. She has been denied information, so that it is harder for her to do her job well. She is sometimes at the bottom of a routed memo so that she doesn't get important agency news in time. Women clerical workers sabotage her. They put work she gives them on the bottom of the pile, and she is afraid that they listen in on her

Sailors take to air

By CAROLYN McDOWELL

YOU HAVE the advantage of me today.

When I bid aloha to the families of the crew of the sloop Ragtime on Thursday at the crack of dawn, Ragtime was trailing the leader (Windward Passage) by only eight miles in the biennial Trans Pacific Yacht Race.

At this writing the first-to-finish boat was expected to cross Diamond Head around noon on Saturday.

It was either the Ragtime or it wasn't.

Ragtime is a 62-foot racing machine co-owned by several members of Long Beach Yacht Club.

I did the dawn patrol to the airport with the family of co-owner Barney Flam pictured at right. Not pictured were Barney's sister, Barbara Celis and her two daughters, Cristina and Barbara, who came all the way from their home in Mexico City to be on the chartered Pan Am "Trans Pac" flight to Hawaii.

Oh yes, my son, Larry, was also aboard. He will join the crew of the Ragtime for the 300-mile race to Kauai after the Trans-Pac winds up.

Pan Am makes the going great on this flight for wives and children of the racers.

The airliners (there were two) track the sailboats and special radio equipment allows the families to talk to the sailors if the reception is good.

With luck, Margo Dalessi, Bell Jr. and Teddy got to talk to husband and father, Bill, another Ragtime owner.

Other co-owners aboard are Stan Eiller, Chuck Kober and Jack Queen, whose wife, Patty, was on the chartered plane.

Co-owner, Dr. Mort Haskell's wife, Beryl, was already in the islands to greet the travelers.

Crew members are Dick Deaver (his wife was already in the islands too) and George Alexander whose wife, Freya, and daughter, Cheryl joined the Pan Am group.

Other Long Beach entries are the Aikane, a 37-foot New Zealand sloop owned by Dr. Arthur "Mickey" Beland and sailing under the Alamitos Bay Yacht Club burgee.

His crew members are Don Hall, Dr. Dick Daniels and son, Craig, Mark Cardenas and Bruce Beland.

Representing Seal Beach Yacht Club, and having the dubious distinction of being the smallest boat in the 62-boat fleet (32-feet) is Teachers Pet, owned by "C.A." Dervis.

His crew members are Dave Wenger, Chick Taylor, Morgan Embroden, Nord Embroden, Larry Jacobsen and Bill Jones.

Miracle! Long haired son sees light at last

By ALMA KIRKLAND

Actually, it was a summer job that stirred all the memories.

A potential employer's terse, "Ya wanna job, ya get yer hair cut," sent the mind flashing back through a maze of clippings on the barbershop floor.

It all began before the Beatles started tossing their just-below-the-ear length bobs; in the days when baby boys with wisps of hair curling at the nape of the neck were marched off to the barber shop by their fathers.

Such a day was literally the cut-off point between babyhood and boyhood.

I remember ours well.

There he was in short pants, with chubby legs and a trusting expression as he walked past the giant peppermint stick into the barber shop.

ALL WENT well as he was lifted onto the chair and wrapped in surgical white. It wasn't until the funny buzzer crawled up the back of his tender neck that he expanded his lungs and wailed the plaintive tune known as the "Barber Shop Lament."

However, he didn't mourn long as his babyhood was swept away in the calico mass. By then a lollipop had stifled his tune.

He walked away with tear stained cheek and a tiny, defiant bristle held in place by butch wax.

As time went on all that seemed to grow were his legs. The hair was something to be cut regularly and he naturally drifted from prickly butch to "boy's regular."

In those days his head was fully equipped with forehead, eyes and ears while his sisters wandered around in perpetual darkness as their bangs curled provocatively over their noses.

While the girls ratted, teased, sprayed and combed, the boy donned Little League caps, football helmets, and Cub Scout hats with a neck that was visible at all times.

THEN CAME the revolution.

The girls cut their hair into wispy shags or wore it long, shiny and squeaky clean. Eyes long kept in darkness became accustomed to the light again.

But, boys were another story.

Hippies came on the scene and almost overnight unkempt hair caressed shoulder blades. Rock groups tossed flowing strands while girls squealed in rapt approval. Surfers wove their tangled webs of surf, sand, wind and hair.

Parents threw up their hands and said, "You can't tell the boys from the girls anymore."

In our house a boy's hair crept gradually down the back of the neck.

Arguments like, "No athlete would be caught dead with long hair," went out the window when Joe Namath's locks began curling below his football helmet and Wilt Chamberlin donned a sweat band.

In our house forehead, ears and eyes were disappearing.

As it began to cascade over the collar I wondered if I'd been right when I said, "It's just a fad. He'll outgrow it." It just might outgrow him.

WITH THIS startling thought came an added aggravation. I had finally reclaimed the bathroom from the girls when he took it over with daily shampoos, long sessions with a hair blower, hot comb and hair spray.

It was finally a car in need of tape deck, chrome lug nuts, extra wide tires and $30 rims that stunted the growth of the hair.

Such luxuries meant money; acquisition of money meant a job; a job meant a haircut.

How simple!

As he squared his broad shoulders and resolutely made his way to the men's hair styling parlor I wondered if he felt like singing that old "Barber Shop Lament."

GREAT OUTDOORS: Volunteers needed to help with several day camp programs for underprivileged children.

SHOW OFFS: Local historical site needs volunteer guides for daily tours.

PAPER WORK: Area wide campaign to benefit the needy is seeking volunteers to assemble and staple materials.

IT'S SHOW BIZ: Little theatre in the North Long Beach area needs young people to take part in a new program.

SHOP TALK: Volunteers needed to help with shopping for elderly shut-ins.

PICTURE PROJECT: Movie projectionist needed on Thursday evenings at a local hospital.

. . . they did

The Community Volunteer Office, which serves as a clearing house to match people who wish to volunteer their time with agencies, clinics and projects that need their help, reports that response to recent months' You can help columns was, as always, heartwarming.

New volunteers ranged from residents who gave time as telephone aides to groups who donated layettes for needy mothers to volunteers who did clerical work for numerous campaigns.

Here's a look at what local people have been doing the last few months:

VOLUNTEERS are staffing telephones for a daily service for the elderly and convalescing for project DEED.

HEART AND CANCER drives were assisted greatly by area people who were willing to give their time to do clerical work.

TRAVELERS were aided by Travelers Aid volunteers at the Long Beach bus station.

LAYETTES for needy mothers-to-be were donated by groups and individuals.

THE SUCCESS of a telethon to aid the Crippled Children's Easter Seal Drive was due largely to the groups and individuals who gave their time.

WELL-BABY CLINICS and immunization centers in the Long Beach and Bellflower areas are being staffed by volunteers to assist regular staff members.

CLERICAL HELP was given by local volunteers to make possible a youth music festival to be held this summer.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS were aided by men and women who donated their time to do clerical work, playground supervision, tutoring and remedial work with students.

Little Erma loves day camp

By ERMA BOMBECK

A column I did four years ago on sending a mother to camp has finally made it big.

It was read by two enterprising sisters-in-law who felt the same way as I did about kids and summer. (I took my children to school in June to wait until the doors opened in September explaining, "If we're early, you'll get a good seat.")

Together, these two sainted women have founded the Martyred Mothers Day Camp. The brochure arrived this week addressed to my children for their approval.

"Can I go?" I asked the kids, jumping up and down, nearly spilling the ice out of my breakfast.

"We'll see," they said shuffling through the literature. "First, let's see how much stuff you need. Bathing suit, white shirt, white shorts, tennies or gold wedgies, ankle socks, rug or security blanket for rest period."

"I've got all that," I said happily.

"I think we could manage the cost and it only lasts a day."

"Do they want to know about my physical condition?"

"Only how long you are going to last," they said. "Also are you subject to sunstroke, dry skin, stringy hair and will the dye run out of your hair in the pool chlorine."

"I cry a lot," I volunteered.

"We know. The camp sounds fine. We'll drop you off Thursday."

I ARRIVED early at the Martyred Mothers Day Camp with a note pinned on my shirt that read: "Erma is allergic to the outdoors and fresh air. Hates crafts. Has dry, cracked heels. Loves naps and Paul Newman coloring books. Her camp buddy must be leading by at least two dress sizes or she will become moody."

IT WAS GREAT. I spent the day at the pool without blowing up rafts until I fainted. I drank Kool-Aid without crumbs floating in it, and napped without listening for water running. And I found a wonderful inferior friend with varicose veins, flabby upper arms, who couldn't sew a stitch and whose kid was repeating sex education for the third year.

The camp was over at 3. By six o'clock another Martyred Mother and I were still sitting on the curb waiting to be picked up.

"Do you think our children have forgotten us?" I giggled.

"That's what I told myself back in June, but after six weeks of waiting, I'm beginning to think they just don't want the responsibility of a Mother."

"Another victory for Planned Parents," I sighed.

When we see different hair styles and cuts we like —, we imagine ourselves in that look. But it is a good idea to know what type and thickness hair we have before choosing a hair style.

What can be done with fine hair? Fine hair can be controlled by layering the hair in a very short look to create the illusion of bulkiness when blown dry and curled with an iron. It can also look fuller in a one length look or reverse layering.

Women escape job ghetto

phone calls in hopes of picking up gossip they can use against her.

How does she cope? With the men who exclude her, she never makes an issue of it. "I try to do things indirectly." With the women secretaries who do sloppy work because they resent her, she "sticks with standards even though they like the men better because they let the girls get away with a lot more." She won't compromise, even when it means doing her own typing.

This approach has obviously been counterproductive. By taking it both from men and from women, she has become bitter, resentful, and defensive, thus stimulating more of the same ostracism that she complains about.

She has a good relationship with the clients of her agency — the businessmen it regulates — which suggests that getting along with other people is not her problem.

What is wrong?

Her own diagnosis is that she does her job so well that she shows the others up and that is why they resent her. She does not recognize that she is a victim of put-down primarily because she does not take positive steps to assert her professional role. The majority of women we interviewed would have told her to spend some of her energy making an issue of her status with her male colleagues and enforcing agency discipline on the secretaries instead of doing their work for them. She prefers the role of martyr, and it is self-defeating.

WHY ARE most women underpaid?

Employers pay many women less than they are worth to the enterprise simply because they can get them for less. The daily paper may be worth a dollar to many people, but they buy it for 15 cents like everyone else.

So with women. Women work cheaper than men because they are arbitrarily limited to "women's jobs," where they compete with each other, thereby driving their wages down. Men have a wider choice of jobs. When a man is not satisfied with the salary he is getting, he can quit to take a better-paying job.

Women have fewer options than men. They have to work for less because they are occupationally restricted. They are forced to work in a female job ghetto.

AREN'T THERE LAWS that prevent women from being underpaid?

Yes. Discrimination against women on the job is not only unfair, it is also illegal.

1. The Equal Pay Act of 1963, amended in 1972, requires almost every employer to pay equal salaries and wages for equal work without regard to sex.

2. Title VII, of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, amended in 1972, by the Equal Employment Opportunity Act prohibits any employer, employment agency, or union from discriminating in any way against women.

3. Executive Order 11246 of 1965, amended by 11375 in 1967, prohibits discrimination by most employers who have contracts with the federal government.

Revised Order 4, issued in 1971, mandates that women must be included in "affirmative action" plans, which are required of all federal contractors.

The plans must establish specific goals and procedures for upgrading women and minority employes.

Any woman who feels she is being underpaid, and/or discriminated against on the job, may take her case to the government, and to court if necessary.

However, it takes a very long time, before laws, no matter how well enforced, can change ingrained custom, and there are many other things an individual woman can do to make more money without taking the legal route. And while she is doing them, it is a comfort to know that the law is on her side.

WITH ALL THOSE laws, how can women get paid less than men?

Women lose out in very specific ways:

Same title, lower pay. Some companies still have different pay scales for men and women doing the same job. Blatant differentials are now illegal, of course, but many employers — and the women who work for them — have not yet caught up with the law. However, even when the starting salaries are the same, women are less apt to get merit increases. Thus they usually average lower pay than men with the same title, particularly in bureaucratic organizations that provide for increases within grade.

Same work, different title carrying lower pay. It's easy to call a man in a personnel department who sees job applicants an "interviewer," and pay him more than a woman who does the same but is called a "clerk," Male "janitors" always have been paid more than female "maids."

This evasion of the Equal Pay Act has been tested and found illegal, and an employer cannot muddy the waters by asking the janitor to do a little extra heavy work. Since 1970 the courts have held that the "skill, effort and responsibility" of the jobs compared must be "substantially equal" rather than identical. This means that an employer can no longer send a male bank teller to an occasional field investigation, call him a trainee, and pay him more than a female bank teller. But it will be a long time before all these irregularities are uncovered, and meanwhile, the women continue to earn less money.

SAME WORK, same pay, different qualifications. Women frequently discover that they are better educated and more qualified than men doing the same work. Econometric studies of wage differentials show that women workers usually have more education and experience than the men on their level.

SAME QUALIFICATIONS, lower pay. Women get assigned to the lower-paying jobs in a field because more women than men are available. An article in a chemical-industry trade publication reports that women are found in the lowest-paying jobs requiring the degree — pharmaceuticals, research, and high school teaching. Male chemists tend to be in management, or administration, production, and inspection, and industrial jobs that pay better. The article adds that the pay gap between male and female chemists widened between 1968 and 1970.

DIFFERENT WORK, requiring similar skill, effort and responsibility. If a man is the administrative assistant to the president of a company he is usually paid more than the president's secretary, even though she is equally adept at solving problems for her employer, and probably knows more about the company because she has been there longer.

SAME WORK, different opportunities for promotion. Women get lower pay than men because they are passed over for promotion to jobs carrying higher pay. The new laws prohibit this also, but it will be a long time before even enlightened organizations compensate for the discrepancies of the past.

SAME JOB, different organization. Women are more apt to work in small, new, and marginal enterprises than in the big, old, rich ones that pay better. Worse yet, women drag each other down. Office workers get less in companies that employ women alone in this category than they get in companies which employ both sexes.

In an exhaustive investigation of the differences in hourly earnings between men and women, Victor R. Fuchs, vice-president of the National Bureau of Economic Research, found that the higher the percentage of female employment in an occupation or industry, the lower the earnings. This was true for the men in predominantly female industries as well as for the women.

DIFFERENT jobs, lower pay. Most women work in women's jobs. In 1969 one-fourth of all employed women were in five occupations — secretary-stenographer, household worker, bookkeeper, elementary-school teacher, and waitress. Secretary's and stenographers' jobs alone accounted for one in every ten women workers.

Dr. Fuchs was struck by how very few occupations employ large numbers of both sexes. "Most men are employed in occupations that employ very few women, and a significant fraction of women work in occupations that employ very few men."

More simply, where the men are, that's where the money is.

FASCINATING FABRICS

Check color-fastness first

By FRANCES DIETRICH

Color is synonymous with summer. This is because there is more sunlight, which is a combination of all colors.

In summer, flowers abound, trees are in leaf, and there is a feeling of buoyancy because we are surrounded by color. Color is complex, affecting us physically and psychologically.

Undoubtedly, it was the desire for personal adornment with color that inspired ancient peoples to paint their bodies; and, later, to develop fabric dyeing as an art. It was a painstaking, and not always reliable, process, as all dyestuffs were derived from natural sources such as plants, shells, tree bark and even insects. It was not until 1856 that the first synthetic dye was developed.

Even today, after years of research and development, all colors are not enduring under all exposures to light, perspiration, washing, drycleaning, crocking (color rubbing off dry fabric), fumes and sea water.

LOOK FOR clues to colorfastness in hang tags, labels and advertising. Fiber-dyed means the fibers have been dyed before the yarns were spun. Yarn-dyed means yarns were dyed before weaving. Solution-dyeing refers to man-made fibers, with color introduced into the solution before the fibers, were extruded through the holes of the spinneret. These three metnods usually mean that the fabric is colorfast to light, perspiration, washing and drycleaning.

When cloth is dyed after weaving, it has been piece-dyed. This is the most economical method of coloring fabric. Vat-dyeing of piece goods provides a high degree of colorfastness for cotton, rayons, and linen.

Most fabrics of man-made fiber are not made of solution-dyed yarns, as this would require the maintenance of costly inventories. However, dyes and methods of dyeing have been developed for piece-dyeing man-made fabric, which provide good fastness to light and laundering.

An exception is acetate. Unless solution-dyed, acetate fabric should be drycleaned, as it is subject to fading and running.

Because of the varying degrees in which man-made fibers absorb dyes, cross-dyeing has been developed. This is a fascinating method, which provides the consumer with a type of fabric not available with any other color process.

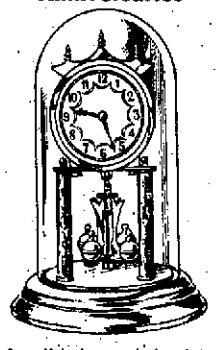

Dissimilar fibers such as polyester and rayon may be woven together and the fabric put in a dye bath of a single color, which will result in a two-color or heather effect.

Two or more fibers, such as nylon, rayon, acrylic and polyester may be combined in one cloth, then put into a bath of several acid dyes, combining blue, yellow and red. The nylon accepts the blue; rayon the yellow; acrylic will take the red, and the polyester will remain white. The result is a four-color fabric from a single "bath" because each of the dyes was attracted to the fiber for which it had an affinity.

A future column will focus on the reliability of various kinds of printing on fabric.

READER SERVICE: You can try one of the most fascinating methods of fabric coloring. # The Aces on bridge

by IRA G. CORN JR. TEAM CAPTAIN

Dear Mr. Corn:

Please settle a difference of opinion. What should the proper rebid be in a standard American system when holding six spades and four hearts?

For example, what do you rebid with:

♠A Q 8 7 6 2 , 7/15
♥K J 9 3
♦Q 4

Opener Responder
1 ♠ 2 ♦

Long or Short
Windsor, Conn.

Answer: Standard authorities vary in their treatments — some rebid the six-card suit; others mention the other major. My treatment depends on the texture of the suits involved. For example, with:

♠A K Q 8 7 6 7/15
♥J 4 3 2

I would rebid two spades. With your hand I would definitely bid two hearts, because the hand is not predominantly spade-oriented, and I would rebid the spades on the next round.

Dear Mr. Corn:

How does one choose between several responses? For example, when holding a hand with 13-15 high-card points and all unbid suits stopped, should one prefer the two-no-trump response to a minor opening even though a four-card major is held?

Choosing Problems
Chicago

Answer: Things aren't all bad when responder holds 13-15 points opposite an opening bid. The problem is not whether to bid game but to investigate all possible contracts. For that reason the response in the major is preferred. No trump can always be bid later if no adequate major suit fit is found.

Dear Mr. Corn:

What is the penalty when declarer leads from dummy when the lead is in his own hand?

Found Guilty
Philadelphia

Answer: If either defender calls attention to the irregularity before a defender plays to the trick, declarer must replace the card erroneously played and must (if able) play a card of the same suit from the correct hand.

Dear Mr. Corn:

What is the Lightner Slam Double?

Wrong Lead
San Francisco

Answer: It is a concention named after Theodore Lightner. The theory is that competent opponents will usually not bid a slam that may be off more than one trick. Therefore, penalty doubles can gain little. The double serves a much better purpose in directing or suggesting a lead. In general, the Lightner Slam Double requests an unusual lead or the first-suit bid by dummy. It specifically requests that the opening leader not lead trumps or a suit bid by the defenders.

UNDAUNTED BY GOAT who stopped to be fed, this young zoo visitor continues his walk along fence ledge in search of something which piqued his interest delight were typical reactions to everything they say, except one little girl, who let out a piercing scream when one of the goats helped himself to her cookie!

Fun trip to zoo

While touring the Children's Zoo, where the animals roam free for feeding and petting, the youngsters found it great fun to hug and kiss the goats and sheep, although one was skeptical of his safety.

"Help! The goat will butt me," he said, shying away.

Others confused the goat with another kind of animal, calling, "Come here Bambi" and "Hi, Bambi."

The children also toured the main zoo complex and jumped up and down, making faces to imitate the baboons until one baboon splashed them with water. This prompted one youngster to comment, "He splashed us because we were making fun of him."

Arrangements for the trip, the first such project undertaken by Rick Rackers, were made by Mrs. Eugene Lassers, service to youth chairman, and Mrs. David Berg, summer programs chairman.

The excursion is one of several programs being initiated this year by Rick Rackers to expand the scope of their philanthropies to a larger segment of the community, according to the two chairmen.

CHEF OF THE WEEK

He conserves energy in the kitchen

By MILDRED K. FLANARY

Today's Chef of the Week Judge F. Anderson is president of the American Wholesale Hardware Company and an outdoor enthusiast as well. He was jogging long before it had become a "professional" sport.

A native of Los Angeles, he was graduated from UCLA in 1948 with a degree in business administration. He came to Long Beach that year to join American Hardware which his father, George W. Anderson, had headed as president since 1932. Judge's first duties were mostly confined to the warehouse. He became president 10 years ago when "Chef" Ben Larner retired.

A member of Long Beach Rotary Club, Anderson serves on the boards of the Long Beach Chamber of Commerce, Merchants and Manufacturers Association and Trustees of Memorial Hospital.

He holds a 25-year membership in the Sierra Club and is a born conservationist and nature lover. Daylight savings times means a great deal to him—he's able to spend more hours in the great out-of-doors.

Anderson gives as his hobbies, hiking and swimming. However, wife, Jeanne, contends that he's a health enthusiast and a walking encyclopedia. She says, "He's either reading or running."

He has done much studying and work in making surveys with the Department of Fish and Game, whose members he numbers among his close friends. Anderson has made three trips to Africa in as many years as guest of the game management of Kenya, helping with and observing projects dealing with migration and conservation of wildlife.

Jeanne says, "Although he's a perfectionist, he's mighty easy to live with. And, I don't really know whether he can cook or not."

However, a friend was visiting them not too long ago and our "Chef" offered to prepare scrambled eggs. "They were so much better than mine," Jeanne adds, "I'll never forget it."

His recipe today for Chicken and Sour Cream was sent in on note paper which indicated, "From the desk of: Jeannie Anderson."

JUDGE F. ANDERSON

CHICKEN AND SOUR CREAM

2 chicken breasts halved, boned and skinned
1 pint sour cream
1 package dried onion soup mix
Corn flake crumbs

Melt butter in pan so that it covers pan thinly.

Mix sour cream and onion soup mix (the whole package is a little too much for a pint, so about ¾ is better). With knife, spread sour cream mix on both sides of chicken breast, so that it is well covered and about ¼-inch thick. Lightly shake on corn flake crumbs. Bake in 325 degree oven for 1 hour and 10 minutes. Serves 4.

Dear Abby

When to issue a false fanny alert

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: A woman wrote and asked you if you knew where she could buy a false fanny and you replied, "Send me your name and address and a stamped, addressed envelope and I will let you know."

Well, I wasn't the person who wrote about it, but I sent my name and address and a stamped envelope making the same request, and you told me where I could order one.

Well, it came and I want to thank you, Abby. My clothes look a lot better on me, but here is my problem: Should I tell a guy (not as soon as I meet him, but after we get to know each other better) that I have a false fanny? I don't think it's fair to wear something fake without being honest about it. I mean, one day we might get to the point where he'll find out himself.

How should I handle this? FALSE FANNY

DEAR FALSE: Don't wait until you get to that point. Just before you think he might find out himself, give him a little warning.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I are are second-time-arounders. I have never seen such stability and tranquility in a marriage.

There is only one problem: I am bored stiff! When we dated, he took me out to dinner and to movies, and we had a great time, but now all he thinks of is work.

I carry his dinner to his office so he can work straight through. He eats in five minutes, thanks me, and goes back to work. When he comes home, it's bedtime, and he is too tired for anything but sleep.

He works all weekend. We NEVER go out for dinner or to a movie anymore. He says it's too expensive, which is ridiculous because we can certainly afford it.

His health is fine. (He had the company doctor examine him, that way he didn't have to pay the bill.)

I am young and pretty and full of life, but I am lonely. He says if I want to see a movie I should go without him, but it's no fun going alone.

I can just see myself ten years from now getting a divorce. Can you help me? FRUSTRATED

DEAR FRUSTRATED: Fill in that communication gap with some straight talk. He's using his "work" as an excuse to isolate himself. Insist on counseling. And if he ducks that, you go alone. Your frustrations could lead to something worse than boredom.

DEAR ABBY: Over the years, my sister, who lives in another state, has been writing me letters that are filled with nothing but her illnesses, the deaths of her friends (whom I don't even know) and any gossip about the family that is bad. She even rehashes the world situation, dwelling on the doom and gloom. After reading one of her letters I am so depressed I just sit and cry. I have written to her, asking her to please quit sending me such depressing letters, but it hasn't helped.

I don't want to sever our relationship completely, but I don't know how else to deal with her. I never write depressing letters to anyone. I am a happy-go-lucky person by nature, but could spread plenty of gloom if I wanted to.

I have tried not answering her letters, but she doesn't need a letter to answer. She writes once a week regardless. Please tell me what to do. ANOTHER DAY RUINED

DEAR RUINED: If you want to let your sister know you mean business, return her letters UNOPENED. She may be hurt and shocked, but I promise you, she'll not write many more depressing letters after that.

DEAR ABBY: A reader thought it would look "ridiculous" for a 47-year-old father to be best man at his son's wedding when the bride had selected a 21-year-old girl to be her maid of honor.

I wonder what that reader would have thought of this situation: When I was 14 years old, I was asked to be the godmother of my new-born cousin. The godfather was my 70-year-old grandfather.

DAVID'S GODMOTHER

CONFIDENTIAL TO THOSE WHO WROTE TO THE EUTHANASIA COUNCIL FOR COPIES OF "A LIVING WILL": If you have not heard from them, please, please be patient. They have been inundated with requests for copies. Thirty thousand additional wills were printed, which were gone in a few days. In order to handle the mail, extra help was called in. Finally, they had to move to larger headquarters. An estimated 100,000 wills have been sent out to date.

Problems? You'll feel better if you get it off your chest. For a personal reply, write to ABBY: Box No. 69700, L.A., Calif. 90069. Enclose stamped, self-addressed envelope, please.

Art—indoors and out

Opening today at Long Beach Museum of Art, 2300 E. Ocean Blvd., are two exhibits which will run through Aug. 26. They are ceramics by William Wilhelmi and graphics by Marc Chagall.

Wilhelmi's bright, enameled surfaced ceramics have underglazes, earth oxides and lusters combined in drawing, brush work and airbrush gradations to produce unusual effects.

Born in Garwin, Iowa, in 1939, the artist received his B.A. from San Diego State College and his M.F.A. from UCLA. He has had one-man exhibits and was represented in the California Design XI exhibition at the Pasadena Art Museum and the Intricate Object show at Long Beach State University.

To commemorate the Israeli Silver Anniversary, the museum is presenting lithographs from Marc Chagall's Daphnis and Chloe Suite. The edition, printed in 1961, is a gift of Dr. Patrick Zaccalini to the museum's Permanent Collection.

WITH ALL performances of Laguna's Pageant of the Masters sold out, it is welcome news that Long Beach Museum Association is offering a few tickets for next Wednesday's performance. If you wish to go, phone Eric J. Laddey, 4147 Bouton Drive, Lakewood, and send him your check for $10.50. This includes round-trip bus fare, box lunch and good seats for the pageant. Reservations will be accepted on a first come, first serve basis. Laddey asks that you enclose your address and telephone number so your reservation can be confirmed. The bus will leave promptly at 6:30 p.m. from 36th Street and Linden Avenue.

The Museum Association also announces that if you become a member (dues start at $15), you may take part in a special art and leisure tour to Spain and Morocco from Oct. 18 to Nov. 2. Museum director Jan von Adlmann will accompany the tour which will go by first class caravan to North Africa with stays also in Granada, Madrid and the Costa del Sol. In Marrakesh, tour members will stay at the luxurious Mamounia Hotel. All accommodations are first class. Members will cruise across the Straits of Gibraltar from Malaga to Tangier.

The inclusive price, including round trip air fare on a TWA carrier, is $911 for the 16 days. For an extra $35, you may accompany the director to private palaces to see art collections not ordinarily open to tourists.

For further information, call the museum.

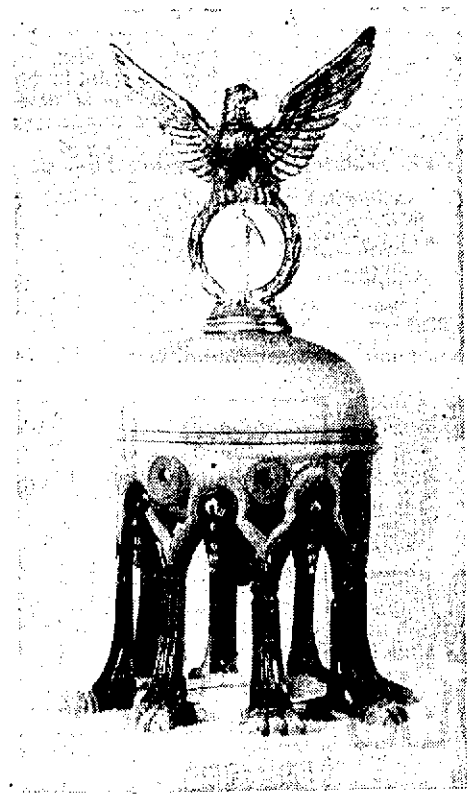

IN LAGUNA from July 13 to Aug. 26, there is not only the Festival of Arts and Pageant of the Masters. Much informality marks the Sawdust Festival '73 in a giant eucalyptus grove in Laguna Canyon. For the past six years, artists and craftsmen have constructed their most original display booths in this location and last year the Sawdust Festival purchased the land. Members have torn down and removed old buildings which housed a motel, but carefully avoided removing any trees or plants. To add to the water effect this year, members have cleaned out a tiny, natural sandstone canyon to create a babbling brook. Visitors will cross on wooden bridges. In clearing the property, once an Indian camp ground, an ancient firepit was uncovered. This is restored and is exhibited.

The city of Laguna insisted that a sidewalk be constructed beside the road faced by the grounds. Festival directors persuaded the city to allow a brick walk instead of one of concrete to create the feeling of a natural setting. But beyond the sidewalk, grounds are covered with inches-deep sawdust. For 25 cents, visitors may stroll through the exhibits of every kind of handicraft and art in booths which may take the shape of windmills or tree houses. Grounds are open daily from 10 a.m. to midnight.

LAKEWOOD ARTIST Guild will celebrate its lucky 13th Dutch Village Open Art Show Friday through next Sunday at the Dutch Village Arcade, Woodruff Avenue and South Street, Lakewood. Show and Sell time will be from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Artists who wish to enter should bring their work to the center from noon to 8 p.m. Thursday. There will be cash awards in professional and non-professional categories. For further information, contact any Dutch Village merchant or write to Lakewood Artist Guild, P.O. Box 71, Lakewood 90714.

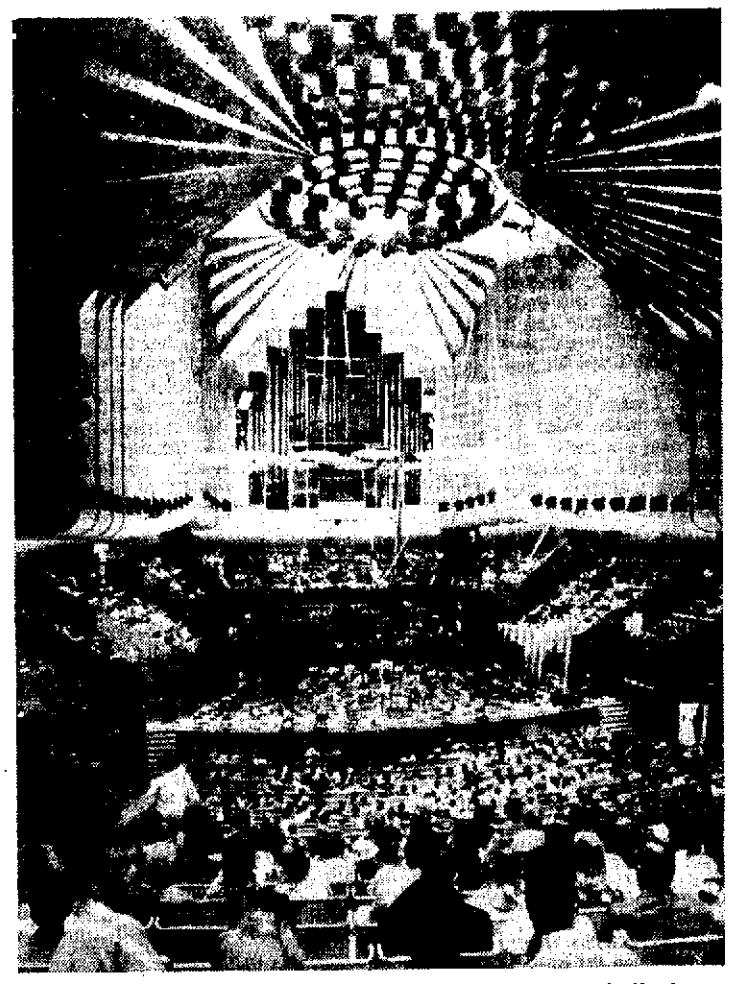

The guild also is sponsoring a bus trip to the Laguna Art Festival July 26. For details, call Bernice Houser, 3212 Roxanne Ave., Long Beach.

AT LONG BEACH Jewish Community Center through July 29 are works by Melvin Wood and Walter Leather Jones. Wood, a faculty member at Cerritos College, is displaying sculpture. Jones, also a Cerritos faculty member, is showing paintings designed to emphasize the effect of the picture plane upon the content. The gallery is open daily except Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and evenings except Fridays from 7 to 10 p.m. It is located at Willow Street and Grand Avenue.

Opera house to open —14 years building

By BRIAN DEWHURST

SYDNEY, Australia (UPI) — The kangaroo has been replaced as the unofficial symbol of Australia by Sydney's $141 million, soon-to-be-opened opera house which was 14 years a-building.

Perhaps no other building constructed in this generation has been as controversial or received as much international publicity. But what was once considered an architectural debacle now graces Sydney's glorious harbor, hovering at the tip of Benelong Point like a great, glittering ship under a series of billowing sails.

Danish architect Jorn Utzon's "Folly", built mostly with money from a special state lottery, will be opened by Queen Elizabeth II on Oct. 20. Social and political Australians already are jockeying for seats for the afternoon opening ceremony and the evening concert which follows.

These will be part of a lavish season of stage, concert and solo performances beginning with a pre-opening presentation Sept. 28 of Prokofiev's "War and Peace" by the Australian Opera Company. Swedish diva Birgit Nilsson is scheduled to sing an all-Wagner concert with the Sydney Symphony and the Cleveland Symphony will present four concerts.

THE SYDNEY Opera House is more than is indicated by its name. In addition to the opera theater with 1,550 seats, there is a 2,700-seat concert hall, a 550-seat drama theater, a 420-seat cinema-music hall, and two restaurants. On nights when the opera house complex is full, there will be nearly 7,000 spectators, performers, staff and diners at Benelong Point.

The house is owned by the government of New South Wales and operated by a trust, which rents the theaters to Australian and visiting production companies. New South Wales initiated the construction project in 1957 with an international design competition won by Utzon, a virtually unknown 38-year-old architect.

Utzon's design, which beat out 232 other entries from architects in 32 nations, was completely unorthodox, calling for concrete roof vaults so daringly shaped that engineers doubted they could be built. But Utzon, and Arup and Partners, a London engineering firm, finally solved the problem.

CONSTRUCTION began in 1959 but the original cost estimate of $9 million was soon outstripped by alarming rises in cost. The state lottery set up to give financial impetus to the lagging project has raised $120 million to date.

However, tension over costs, speed of planning, methods of construction, and payment of fees became so acute that Utzon resigned in 1966 and returned to Denmark, where he currently is planning a palatial parliament building for oil-rich Kuwait. Utzon was succeeded by three Sydney architects, Peter Hall, Lionel Todd, and David Littlemore, who designed the interiors.

For acoustial reasons, the Australian architects daringly decided to switch Utzon's plan to have the main auditorium as a dual purpose hall for concerts and operas. They put opera in a second hall. Test concerts and instrument analysis, including a couple of shotgun blasts, have shown that each hall now has near-perfect acoustics for its purpose.

THE OPERA HOUSE has one drawback. There are no parking facilities for its patrons.

About 18 months ago, someone on the planning staff woke up to the fact that there were no parking facilities on narrow Benelong Point.

Films recall studio fame

A 73-film retrospective of motion pictures made at 20th Century-Fox from 1933 to 1973 opened Friday at Los Angeles County Museum of Art's Bing Theater and will continue through Sept. 16. Arranged by the American Film Institute, the retrospective shows the studio as an influential force in both film masterworks and purely entertainment movies.

The studio was largely responsible for the fame of John Ford, Henry King, Otto Preminger, Howard Hawks, Raoul Walsh, Henry Hathaway and other directors. Such stars as Tyrone Power, Alice Faye, Don Ameche, Shirley Temple, Henry Fonda, Carmen Miranda, Phil Silvers, Ginger Rogers, Paul Newman, Robert Mitchum, Jayne Mansfield, Robert Wagner, Shelley Winters and Lee Remick won worldwide recognition under the 20th Century-Fox sponsorship.

Performances will be Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings and Saturdays at 2 p.m. The evening programs will begin at 8 p.m. except for a starting time of 7 p.m. on those Saturdays when three full-length features spotlighting specific personalities will be shown. These include tributes to Marilyn Monroe and Allan Dwan. Some programs will be devoted to musicals, continuing character series and other themes.

Said Ronald D. Haver, the museum's assistant curator of film, "Many of these films have been seen for many years only on television where they have been chopped and edited until they are virtually unrecognizable. The impact of high-key black and white, and especially the vivid colors of the original Technicolor process have been all but lost. Unless you can see movies like 'Leave Her to Heaven,' 'Wilson,' 'Margie,' 'Jesse James,' or 'The Black Swan' in a theater, in 35mm, projected in the correct format as we are able to do, you really have no idea of what going to the movies meant when these films were first released."

Tickets may be purchased in advance at the museum or by mail, or at the box office one hour before showtime. Prices are $2 general admission, $1.50 for museum members and students with I.D. For further information call the museum which is located at 5905 Wilshire Blvd.

MARILYN MONROE in 'The Seven Year Itch' will be seen Aug. 4 at 7 p.m. as part of the 20th Century-Fox retrospective film series.

Bowl bills fare for adults, kids

Hollywood Bowl programs Tuesday and Thursday will showcase stars of opera; Saturday will be a Beethoven Spectacular. All will begin at 8:30 p.m. and will be conducted by James Levine, principal conductor of New York's Metropolitan Opera.

Tuesday, the renowned American soprano Beverly Sills will sing music by Handel, Adam and Meyerbeer. Levine will lead the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra in works by Handel, Strauss and Berlioz.

Thursday, Levine and the Philharmonic will join with singers Beverly Wolff, Kenneth Riegel, Michael Devlin and Arthur Edwards and the Los Angeles Master Chorale in a concert performance of Berlioz' "The Damnation of Faust."

Saturday, Levine leaves the opera field to conduct the Beethoven bill. Pianist Paul Schenly will be soloist in "Piano Concerto No. 4." The orchestra will play "Symphony No. 7" and will close with "Wellington's Victory" to accompaniment of cannon, mortars, muskets and a colorful spectacle.

AS THE BOWL begins its second week of the season, another series will begin Monday for children, Open House at the Bowl. During the past four years more than 200,000 young people have attended this series begun in 1969. This year, emphasis is on total involvement in music and related arts of dance, art, mime, puppets and drama.

Performances will take place at 9:30 and 10:30 a.m. with activities in the box office plaza and the garden workshop area. In addition, audiences are invited to the Los Angeles Philharmonic's morning rehearsals from 9:30 a.m. to noon on the Bowl stage. Admission is free. However, reservations are required on Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Fridays for groups and individuals. Wednesdays are set aside for parents and their children to attend without reservations. To make reservations or receive further information, phone Joan Reynolds at the Hollywood Bowl.

There's a beautiful new world in the land 'down under'

By THOMAS TALAMINI

New Zealand is a land noted for its beauty, but if I were asked to select just one beauty spot as the ultimate it would have to be Milford Sound, in Fiordland National Park, at the southwest corner of the South Island.

This doesn't mean you should travel to New Zealand, visit Milford and then fly off to your next destination. This "down under" country, frequently referred to as "the world in miniature", has compressed into an area two-thirds the size of California almost all of the attractions found elsewhere on this earth.

There are warm, golden beaches reminiscent of the Riviera, the snow-capped alps of Switzerland and Austria, the cool alpine lakes of Northern Italy, a huge thermal area with steaming rivers, many-hued lakes, bubbling mud and spouting geysers, dramatic fiords and some of the largest glaciers outside the Polar regions and the Himalayas.

There are almost three million friendly New Zealanders, often referred to as "Kiwis" after the strange, flightless emblem bird of their country. Most are of British or European origin, but about one-tenth are Maoris, descendants of the Polynesians who originally settled this land back in the 14th century.

At the Maori Arts and Crafts Institute in Rotorua, you can watch wood carving taking shape, visit a model village and enjoy a Maori concert any evening of the week.

But the dramatic impact of Milford's scenery defies description. One writer put it well: "You need three-dimensional words in full color ... and even then you'd be groping."

This 10-mile fiord, gouged out by a prehistoric glacier, snakes in from the sea between sheer rock walls and sky-piercing peaks that rise from almost unfathomable waters. Dominating the Sound from every angle is mighty Mitre Peak, a 5,560-foot granite sentinel, shining in some lights like polished metal as innumerable streams slither down for thousands of feet and finally cascade into the dark waters of the Sound as delicate waterfalls.

The two-story Milford Hotel looks toy-like from a distance, sheltered in the landward arm of the Sound at the foot of the towering peaks. From all the public rooms and many bedrooms of the hotel, which is comfortable and well-appointed, the visitor has a perfect view of the Sound and Mitre Peak. One of the highlights of the cuisine is New Zealand lobster caught in the Sound and served to perfection all year round in the hotel's fine restaurant, the "Lobster Pot".

Due to its remoteness (it is 76 miles from the nearest township, Te Anau) and popularity, it is advisable to book ahead at the 40-room Milford Hotel. Most visitors consider a one or two-night stopover necessary to enjoy the scenery to the fullest and see the changing face of this magnificent fiordland area.

If time is limited, however, you can use Te Anau as your base, making a day trip to see the Sound and take in the launch cruise. This can be done by excursion bus throughout the year or by car.

"Budget" accommodation is available at the 102-bed Johnson's Hostel a short distance from the Milford Hotel. Here, the average daily rate, including meals, is $10.65 (bed, no facilities), $11.65 (with wash basin) and $13.00 (private facilities), or if you just want bed and breakfast, subtract $5.05 ($2.35 lunch and $2.70 dinner) from these rates.

The hostel is used extensively by hikers on the Milford Trace, a 33-mile trail from the head of Lake Te Anau, which has been described as "the loveliest walk in the world".

Whatever you pay, wherever you stay, it's a small price for a brief idyll spent in this remote fiordland paradise where even seeing is hardly believing.

FJORD ON NEW ZEALAND'S SOUTH ISLAND

Sit back, take it easy in grand Tahitian style

Tahiti is not really an island. It's a state of mind.

This may sound odd, but after a visitor's been here about two days, he begins to accept it. After 200 years of contact with the traveling public, starting with Captains Cook, Wallis and the famous Bligh, Tahiti has changed little.

Of course, motor scooters, economy cars, TV and all the trappings of a modern world are visible. But the Tahitians have managed to absorb all these "blessings" and keep their own philosophy.

It is very hard to get an ulcer in Tahiti. No one lets anything become that important. Appointments are kept, usually not exactly on time, but at least on the same day or week. The bus may not run on time. Maybe this is the day not to work. Why worry?

This story is apocryphal but not the philosophy: During construction of a hotel, a local woodworker was asked the price of a dozen "tikis," the carved idols now a typical personificaiton of Polynesian life. He replied that the first would cost 500 francs, and each of the remaining eleven would cost 10,000 francs.

Asked about the price variance, he replied, "The first one would be fun. The others would be work."

And so even modern Tahitians successfully cope with alien civilization. They don't even raise an eyebrow at Pan American World Airways' great jetliners which whistle in, only eight hours from Los Angeles.

Local government regulations forbid tipping, and the Tahitian doesn't really mind. To a visitor, they are extremely cordial, helpful and do much to make a first-time arrival feel comfortable.

Tahitians live on the beach — this is where they play, fish, swim and dream. They share their island paradise willingly.

However, paradise is open to various definitions. There are some who revel in relaxation and doing absolutely nothing. There are those who take great enjoyment in touring the island and standing where Capt. Cook stood when he first landed in Tahiti and then riding around to see and film the wonders of the island.

Tours bring Pacific closer

Foreign travel means shopping, and nearly everyone knows you can bring home $100 worth of purchases without having to pay an import duty. The exceptions to this rule, reports TWA, are the U.S. Virgin Islands, Guam and American Samoa. Tourists may bring back $200 in duty free items from these three places.

DAZZLING REEF CARVED BY THE SEA

Much to see, do in Guam

It is especially appropriate that the island of Guam should be included in Trans World Airlines' round-the-world route, for Guam was first discovered in 1521 by the original round-the-world explorer, Ferdinand Magellan.

Magellan didn't know it, but in sailing to Guam and its sister islands of the Marianas group, he crossed the deepest water anywhere on the globe — the 37,800-foot-deep Marianas Trench. By way of comparison, TWA's Star Stream Intercontinental 707s cruise just about that far above the surface of the Pacific on their way from Honolulu to Guam.

Guam is actually the peak of an ancient, extinct volcano, but it has no visible cone or crater. Large portions of the island are covered with lush tropical vegetation, and the 50-mile drive around the circumference is quite scenic. Scattered here and there the visitor may find latte stones, monuments erected by unknown inhabitants of past centuries for equally unknown purposes.

Guam is situated 800 miles north of the equator, some 2,000 miles southeast of Hong Kong, and about as far west of Hawaii as New York is from Paris. It is said to be "where America's day begins," because it is the nearest of all U.S. territories to the western side of the International Date Line.

As the location might suggest, Guam enjoys a warm, usually sunny climate, with daily temperatures ranging between 70°F and 90°F. However, there is a rainy season from about July through October, and typhoons have been known to blow through the area.

travel

Like many other islands in the Pacific, Guam has known its share of stormy history. Under Spanish rule, the island served as a way station for gold-laden galleons sailing between Mexico and the Philippines. In 1898 the United States captured Guam without bloodshed.

The next change of possession was more violent. Japanese forces swooped down from the neighboring islands of the Marianas in December 1941 and quickly seized Guam. The tables were turned on July 21, 1944, when American marines and soldiers wrested back the island after fierce fighting. Occasional wrecked tanks and plasted pillboxes can still be seen in the jungle, mute witnesses to the battle.

TECHNICALLY, Guam is described as an unincorporated territory of the United States. U.S. currency is used. There is a locally elected legislature, but the governor is still appointed by the president of the United States. In the autumn of 1970, Guamanians expect for the first time to elect their governor.

U.S. residents returning to the 50 States enjoy a special duty-free customs exemption if they do at least part of their overseas shopping in Guam. Goods up to a total value of $200, including one gallon of liquor, may be purchased in Guam and brought back duty-free, regardless of where they were manufactured. Of that total, no more than $100 worth, including a maximum of one quart of alcohol, may be purchased outside of Guam. Receipts should be kept carefully, to prove to customs inspectors where the merchandise was bought.

Guam boasts good deep-sea fishing and pleasant but mostly undeveloped beaches. According to one local saying, "It's like Hawaii 50 years ago," but of course Hawaii 50 years ago had no late afternoon traffic bottlenecks, housetrailers, B-52s or Polaris subs. Perhaps in one sense, Guam is indeed like Hawaii 25 years ago. It is on the threshold of development as a center for travelers who, during the 1970s, will be exploring the unspoiled charms of Micronesia.

A place where Sundays begin at 3 a.m.

EDITOR'S NOTE: The writer taught English in Tonga as a Peace Corps volunteer in 1969-70.)

By TOM WILLIAMS
Staff Writer

Sunday in the Tonga Islands, a small Polynesian archipelago 700 miles southeast of Samoa, begins at 3 a.m.

The men in charge of the Sunday feast rise then to begin elaborate preparations for the "umu" or ground oven.

First they dig a hole about four and one half feet deep and fill it with dried wood and volatile palm fronds young boys have collected from the jungle.

The fire is lit, and fanned until it has burned down sufficiently for porous coral rocks to be heaped on and absorb the heat of the coals. These rocks also provide a buffer between the fire and the food.

Then the sections of pork, fatty lamb shanks imported from New Zealand, fish, lobster, taro roots, and tapioca all wrapped in banana leaves are strategically placed on the rocks.

Next another layer of banana leaves — and finally a covering of earth closes in the repast for the long slow bake.

AT 6 A.M. as the sun begins to rise on these lush verdant tropical islands, the pealing of church bells breaks the early morning stillness. The first church service of the day is about to begin.

Churches flourish in Tonga. Methodists are by far the most prevalent, but there are also Catholics, Mormons, Episcopalians, and the Free Church of Tonga — a scion of the Methodists.

In my small village of only 60 households — Kanokupolu — there were three churches, the largest being Methodist.

As a teacher I occupied a special position in the village and would try to attend a different church each week, thereby avoiding aligning myself with a specific power faction in the village.

SHORTLY after the bells stopped pealing, any still-sleeping Sunday slacker among these intensely Christian people might hear a Tonga rendition of Handel's Hallelueha Chorus pierce the palm frond walls of his "fale mohe" or sleeping hut.

Tongans are a very communal people and they love to sing. Their singing seems to bind them together. Singing pervades almost every facet of their lives — church attendance being one.

When the singing stops the minister begins his sermon. Often he may be a visitor from a neighboring village as a strong reciprocity amongst these villages is a keynote of island life.

The ministers are very dramatic. They often work themselves into such frenzies that they break into tears as the members of the congregation shift uneasily.

Although the Tongans in the congregation don't look directly at the minister, nor he at them, they do listen. This is demonstrated by the elders who ring the walls of the church.

They may be on their hands and knees, with heads bowed reverently on the seat of a chair as if in meditation. Occasionally they answer the minister's words with "mo'o-ni," "malo," or "ko'ia!" meaning really, thank you or that's it!

The sermons are always colored by stories of Jesus and his humane treatment of others.

ONCE THE early morning service ends, the parishoners shuffle out of the church and "eva eva" stroll along the crushed coral road nodding hellos and greetings.

The women hurry home to prepare the little ones for the regular nine o' clock service, the younger men return to the umus, and the elders retire to the hut where the Sunday morning kava ceremony is to be held.

This ritual is an extremely important part of Tongan life. The men gather together and discuss village problems over kava, village events such as a hut raising are always accompanied by the kava ceremony. And young men even court their favorite ladies with a kava ceremony.

Kava is a pepper tree. Tongans beat the root and grind it into a fine stringy pulp to mix with water. Although a mild narcotic, the word "mild" should be stressed as kava is infinitely better-known as a diuretic. Men in the kava ceremony are constantly excusing themselves to go outside.

There is a great range in the formality of the ceremony for each instance. But the Sunday morning kava ceremony is usually one of the more formal occasions requiring a specific protocol.

INSIDE the hut the men sit in a circle. At one end in the large kava bowl the kava is being prepared by the daughter of the presiding elder. The elder is asked by an assistant who should be given a coconut shell full of kava. If he said "Havelu Lahi" I would respond with a deep clap of my hands befitting my ceremonial name Big Grave which denoted my living next to the ancient burial ground of many famous Tongan chiefs slain in battle.

The village headman had named me when I first arrived and always took great delight in that name. The contrast between this thin young American and an important chief was so absurd it always made him laugh.

The talk at any kava ceremony is mostly centered around the happenings in the village: what day the fish would be coming around the western point of the island, the latest news on the government pig scheme, did Monu's pig root up Tupou's taro garden ! The Sunday morning ceremony adjourned after half an hour of kava drinking so we could attend our second service of the day.

THE FREE CHURCH of Tonga service was always an enjoyable experience because Siale was the song leader there. Squat and balding with a buddha-like face and four gnarled teeth, Siale led the congregation in gravel-voiced tones.

Almost immediately after the singing Siale would doze off, the victim of a late night stint around the kava bowl. Someone had to poke him for each song, but once jarred awake Siale miraculously began with the right song. The whole time I was in the islands I don't think Siale ever heard a single sermon.

After the service everyone attends the feast. The umu is uncovered and the young men serve the elders first. After they finish eating the younger men and women and children are allowed to begin.

Following the feast the elders, one by one, give thanks to the hosts, the women and men who had prepared it, and to God for providing it.

Leisurely Sunday afternoons in Tonga are spent relaxing and chatting with friends and relatives. While I was there the sabbath law strictly forbade playing and working. The island virtually shuts down on Sundays: Not even buses were allowed to run.

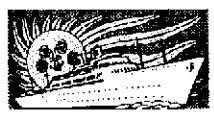

The 6 p.m. Sunday service was devoted primarily to singing, and was usually well atténded by the elders.

California's most popular Caribbean cruises sail from Miami.

We flew more than 21,000 Californians to Miami for cruises last year. People who know a value when they see it. Here's what they saw:

Price. You pay only a little more than if you started your cruise in Miami. But you start it in Los Angeles. On a World Airways 747 charter jet.
Our low price includes round-trip jet fare to Miami. All transportation taxes, port taxes and airport transfers in Miami. And your choice of the Caribbean's most popular 7- and 14-day cruise ships: Song of Norway, Nordic Prince and Sun Viking.
Simplicity. Taking a Royal Caribbean air/sea cruise is easier than going to Duluth to see Aunt Ethel.
Sit down with your travel agent and pick a Friday evening. When it comes, board a sleek World Airways jet at Los Angeles International, fly to Miami, hop in a limousine that whisks you away to the ship.
New ships. Our oldest ship is only two years old.
All three were designed specifically for Caribbean cruising.
Which means almost an acre of sundeck, a big pool, saunas, dining rooms and lounges inspired by hit Broadway musicals. It also means the unique Viking Crown Lounge—a cocktail lounge ten stories in the sky. No other ships in the world have anything quite like it.
The places most people want to go.
If you've got two weeks, the Nordic Prince sails to Nassau, San Juan, St. Thomas, plus Martinique, Curaçao, Caracas, Aruba, Montego Bay and Port-au-Prince. While the Sun Viking sails to Grenada, Trinidad, Barbados, Caracas, Curaçao, St. Thomas, Port-au-Prince, Nassau and San Juan. Nice choice, nice price. From $690 to $1,190.*
If you've only got a week, you can sail on the elegant Song of Norway to Nassau, San Juan and St. Thomas. You pay from $385 to $635.*
Ask your travel agent. Ask him if this is the Caribbean's best cruise value. He'll probably say yes.
Since over 21,000 Californians took our air/sea cruises last year, he'll also say make your reservations early.

VENICE OF THE SOUTH SEAS

Fiji famous for bargains

By JACK P. GABRIEL

In October, 1970, Suva, capital of the Fiji Islands, gave the biggest party in its history. No longer a British Crown Colony, it became the capital of an independent nation of the British Commonwealth.

When the excitement of the independence festivities ended, and Prince Charles, guest of honor and representing his mother, Queen Elizabeth II, departed, Suva went back to business as usual. That meant that it became host to an increasing number of visitors, many from North America.

If you arrive by air, the international airport is on the other side of Viti Levu, the principal island. It is 140 miles from Suva, the capital, to which you can fly or drive. The winding, unpaved road passes through sugar cane fields, jungles, villages and the Coral Coast resort area. You can make the trip in a rented car, courier-driven car, taxi or by air-conditioned bus, which makes stops en route at the leading hotels.

Touring on sea or land, and soaking up an exotic atmosphere indigenous to the South Seas, are primary pastimes here. Oh, yes, and the duty free shopping, of course, for which Fiji is now famous. This is the shopping center of the South Pacific, with everything available from almost everywhere.

The population is polyglot, with many Chinese, and people from islands such as Tonga, the Solomons, New Hebrides, Cooks and others. As most of them wear national dress, it is an interesting sight to see the residents in their colorful costumes, resembling a small United Nations in itself. There are almost 80,000 of them in Suva, the largest city as well as the capital.

Some of the world's best yacht cruises, lasting from one to three days, sail from Fiji ports to nearby lagoons adorned with tropical islands that are exactly as you hoped they would be, complete with friendly residents. It must be said here that one principal reason for traveling is to meet the people, and the tall, handsome Fijians never disappoint. Their graciousness, and genuine interest in strangers, is this country's principal asset, and that is saying a great deal in a land that has so many assets.

Toshogu Shrine popular stop

Tochigi Prefecture, centered some 50 miles due north of Tokyo, is one of Japan's most visited areas — by foreign and domestic travelers alike.

Most come to see famed Nikko, with its Toshogu Shrine, dedicated to the founder of the Tokugawa Shogunate which ruled Japan for more than 250 years up to the mid-nineteenth century. Here, visitors can see the original three "see no evil, hear no evil, speak no evil" monkeys, carved into the facade of one of the ornate buildings that make up the shrine.

From Nikko, a winding road leads up the mountain to placid Lake Chuzenji, which spills over to form the spectacular Kegon Waterfall, with breath-taking vistas of the surrounding countryside.

These are the area's attractions that are best known to Americans who have visited Japan — but Tochigi Prefecture has much more to offer. There are more than 30 hot spring spas, and Nikko National Park contains some of the most striking mountain scenery in all Japan.

The Prefecture is also rich in handicrafts, Nikko itself is known for its lacquerware, while the town of Mashiko is world-famous for its distinctive pottery. The prefectural capital, Utsunomiya, excels in stone crafts, called Oyaishi, and Karasuyama produces traditional Japanese paper.

The area is easily reached by speedy and comfortable train service from Tokyo, and a new auto expressway to Utsunomiya and beyond is due for completion this year. There are also many guided tours to Nikko, originating in Tokyo.

TRAVELING WITH DELAPLANE

Gem market soaring

By STAN DELAPLANE
Hongkong

Diamonds and jade are going out of sight here — Chinese buying them to unload U.S. dollars. Cheaper white jade is up a thousand per cent in the last few months.

Diamonds (considered a good hedge by Chinese) are mainly small stones used as settings. Bigger main stones may still be a good buy. Hongkong diamond merchants say seventy-five per cent of diamonds owned by Americans — jewelry stones — can't be sold for what you paid for them.

Barclays Bank, England is equivalent to our Bank of America — has some interest in a new machine that "reads" diamonds. Does a computer job that analyzes brilliance, color, flaws and gives an exact answer of value.

Chinese merchants here don't like it a bit since there's more chance of an edge in the screw-the-glass-in-the-eye jeweler's method.

Not worthwhile if you're just buying an engagement ring. But if you're going into something like $10,000 worth of diamonds, it would be good insurance to put them under this gadget. Barclays can tell you how to go about it.

"If we could find some quiet and pleasant (and not touristy) place in Spain . . .?"

A far-out villa on the island of Mallorca at a cost of $80 a day per couple, but it includes everything. I mean EVERYTHING. A suite with bedroom and sitting room. All cocktails, wines, brandies. A car and chauffeur. All meals. Laundry. Stamps. Cigarettes. Telephone calls. If you want your hair done, they send a hairdresser to your room.

Now the villa has a LIMITED guest list and the Count who runs it screens it carefully. If you are self-sufficient, you do fine. If you can get along with a small group on a yacht, you'd like it.

Weiskopf ignores Miller

Combined News Services

TROON, Scotland — Tom Weiskopf, playing "the best golf of my life," fired a final round 70 to win the $125,000 British Open golf championships by three strokes Saturday from U.S. Open champion Johnny Miller and British veteran Neil Coles.

Weiskopf led through every round and cracked Miller's challenge on the final nine holes, finishing 12-under-par at 276 to tie Arnold Palmer's British Open record 11 years ago on the same 7,064-yard par 72 Troon seaside links.

It was Weiskopf's first major torunament win and his fourth victory in a seven week hot-spell, earning him $14,300 to boost his yearly earnings to $175,327.

"I was never really conscious of John playing," said Weiskopf of the last-day pressure. "I tried to remember things I had done before in major tournaments to lose. I remembered making too many fast decisions yesterday and today I was much slower and had complete control of myself. It was the best golf of my life."

Weiskopf used a piece of information from Jack Nicklaus to keep his mind off his partner Miller.

"Jack said 'don't play Johnny, play the course.' And that is what I did," said Weiskopf.

Miller shot an even par 72 after choking on three-foot and five-foot putts on the 15th and 16th holes just when he needed to apply the pressure. He ended nine-under at 279.

"Naturally I would like to have won," said Miller. "But I didn't hit the putts when I needed them. Tom played very well, putting them when he needed."

"Weiskopf deserved to win. I was pleased just to make second place."

Miller said Weiskopf's win had a certain air of inevitability.

"Somehow I knew I couldn't catch him," Miller said in describing his round with the lanky winner who was just one stroke ahead going into the last 18 holes.

"I coudln't get the putts to fall.

"And when you got in the rough out there today it was like trying to hit the ball out of a pail of water."

Nicklaus recovered after a disastrous 76 Friday to shatter the course record with a 65 that put him in fourth spot, eight-under on 280. The Golden Bear, who like Weiskopf comes from Columbus, Ohio, fired six birdies and an eagle three on the 481-yard 11th, but marred his sensational round with a bogey five at the 17th.

Coles, the balding 38-year-old Briton who has represented his country in the past six Ryder Cup matches, holed a 10-foot birdie putt on the 18th to tie Miller for second place and each recived $9,425.

Bert Yancey came home in a two-under-par 70 to end at 281, five strokes ahead of next man Peter Butler of Britain.

If Weiskopf, who never three-putted in any round, felt any pressure on him as he went out in drenching rain, he didn't show it. Miller hooked 30-yards into the rough off the second tee to end the 391-yarder with a bogey and the 30-year-old Weiskopf, who Thursday said he would not call himself a great golfer until he had won a major title, applied the pressure witha 20-foot birdie putt at the next hole.

Miller birdied the fifth but Weiskopf came right back with another red-hot effort from 25 feet on the sicth to go 12-under for the tournament.

Both men birdied the 11th where Nicklaus drove chipped and putted to an eagle but Weiskopf had his only bogey on the 13th when he hooked 40 yards off the green, pitched up short and missed a 15-foot chance.

Miller now had four holes to make up two shots but saw his putting touch desert him completely, bogied the 15th and ended three shots adrift.

For defending champion Lee Trevino, who had confidently stated he was going to win his third straight British crown, the tournament was a glum one. But Super Mex at least ended with a flourish, closing out with a 68 after his 75-73-73 for a 289, 10 strokes far away from the winner.

A stroke back of Trevino was the man whose record was tied. Palmer matched par with a final round 72 and a total of 290.

Bruce Crampton, the leading money winner making a rare appearance in Britain, was nowhere, finishing at 292.

"No matter how many major tournaments I win, I will never be as excited as I have been this week," said Weiskopf.

"The Scottish fans are just marvelous. They understand the game. They certainly get the best out of me.

"I regard the U.S. and British Opens as the best

By GORDON VERRELL

The Dodgers own their biggest lead in 10 years.

The Dodgers' seven-game lead in the National League West is an incredible feat considering less than a week ago the O'Malleys were in the midst of a six-game losing streak.

But the club's pitching, considered the Dodgers' strength in the spring, has now surfaced.

Following shutouts by Andy Messersmith and Tommy John, Al Downing returned to the starting rotation with a flourish Saturday night, rolling through the Chicago Cubs on just four hits before Jim Brewer came in to save the victory.

The two of them combined for a five-hit 7-3 triumph, staged before a whopping turnout of 53,870 — the largest Dodger Stadium crowd in three years.

DODGER OF DAY
AL DOWNING hurled seventh victory, beating Chicago, 7-3.

Already 102,928 fans have poured through the gates on the first two legs of Helmet Weekend with another big crowd anticipated for this afternoon's series finale with the leaders of the Eastern Division.

While the Dodgers, winners of four games in a row and seven of eight since dropping six in a row, continued to build on their lead in the West, the Cubbies' once-comfortable margin in the East has dwindled toj just three games over the fast-closing St. Louis Cardinals.

But even the Cards, who lost 12 of their first 13 games, didn't make a turnaround quite like the one turned by Downing Saturday night.

Al Downing did in the first inning was walk two batters, hit another and throw a wild pitch for a run — and then strike out seven Cubs in a row. Seven!

In all, he whiffed nine, his high as a Dodger.

"I once struck out 14 in six innings with the Yankees," Downing said. "But that's when I could throw hard."

While he allowed only two hits through seven innings, the Dodgers built a sizeable lead against Burt Hooton, highlighted by Joe Ferguson's 13th homer of the year but his first since June 10.

"It was the hardest ball I've hit since coming off the disabled list," he said, adding, "but, then, I haven't been getting too many good pitches to hit."

Ron Cey popped out his prolonged slump, too, driving in two runs whit a

By DON MERRY

DETROIT — Bobby Winkles had dinner reservations for Saturday night. The restaurant he chose was located only a block and one-half from the hotel.

"We'll take a cab," Winkles announced sadly in a gloom-infested clubhouse. "The way my luck's going I'm not going to take a chance on walking."

The vents of the home half of the ninth inning Saturday in Detroit would have been enough to send a weaker man to the point of self-extinction and undoubtedly there were a few Angels who felt like slashing their throats.

Davey Sells and Al Gallagher to name two.

There were the Angels clinging grimly to a 1-0 lead behind the untidy but courageous 10-hit pitching of Rudy May, who spent the better part of an overcast afternoon performing a high-wire act.

He never fell. At least until the ninth when somebody cut the rope.

Ike Brown, the leadoff hitter, hit one in the hole at shortstop that Rudy Neoli gloved but his off balance throw was late.

A spark of life for the Tigers.

Dick Sharon was asked to bunt, couldn't, and lined out to center. Willie Horton batted for Aurelio Rodriguez and walked. Runners on first and second and the Angel dugout starts to twitch.

Eddie Brinkman then banged what looked like a double play ball to Gallagher to third but Gallagher's throw to Sandy Alomar at second is slightly wide. Somehow, Alomar manages to keep a foot on the bag long enough to get a force on pinch-runner Jim Northrup in the opinion of umpire Ron (Lucky) Luciano.

The Tigers don't agree. In fact they disagree most vehemently.

Billy Martin storms after Luciano and is joined in the debate by third base coach Joe Shultz. Ike Brown is convulsed by spasms of rage and Martin is beginning to turn blue himself.

Luciano wins the argument, naturally, and Shultz utters a final obscenity and is summarily bounced.

Mickey Stanley walks and the tiring, struggling May is finally replaced by Sells.

Botts after Jacobs' title

By DOUG IVES
Staff Writer

One golfer who is as jittery as a bridegroom and another who seemingly has nerves of steel will provide the intriguing matchup today at El Dorado for the championship of the $12,500 Southern California PGA Match Play Tournament.

Tommy Jacobs, the cool veteran who has won 19 consecutive matches and two titles and Rafe Botts, the fidgety newcomer, are the combatants in a 36-hole showdown which promises to be an exciting duel between two superb shotmakers.

Considering that most of Jacobs' matches have been as onesided as a firing squad, and his medal scores have been sparkling, the 38-year-old La Costa Country Club pro has to rate as a solid favorite. But don't bet on it.

Botts is coming off a win in the Ontario Open last month and his snail-like tempo, coupled with an abundance of confidence, could be enough to prevent Jacobs from becoming the first player to win three successive titles since Olin Dutra strung together four in 1937-40.

Jacobs says he is concerned that Botts plays so slowly but vows that it will not affect his own play. But that remains to be seen, because Tommy is the speed-up type and he will be forced to wait on his opponent.

Botts, who also talks to himself on every shot, claims there is nothing psychological about his style.

"Everyone should play at the speed which suits him best," says the former tour player. "I can and have played much faster, but I find my concentration is better at my present pace."

As for his fidgety mannerisms, the gregarious Bolls says, "I've always had a bad case of nerves. I've talked to a doctor, but there isn't much I can do."

Today's match begins at 9:30 a.m. The afternoon round starts at 1:30. First prize is $2,300, second $1,500.

Jacobs was forced to the 17th hole for the first time Satuday, eliminating Dennie Meyer of San Bernardino, 2-1, Surprisingly, Tommy made only one birdie, on the 17th, and failed to break par (he was even) for only the second match in three years.

But Jacobs showed the gallery just how good he can be in the afternoon when he wiped out Dave

Lanty's Jet wins Los Al Futurity

Lanty's Jet, a 2-year-old daughter of one of quarter horse racing's immortals, Jet Deck, narrowly nipped 1-2 favorite Coca's Kid Saturday night in the fourth running of the $157,000 Golden State Futurity, the richest race run at Los Alamitos Race Course since the track went to night racing in 1968.

The speedy filly did things the hard way in winning the Futurity, first beating $109,000 Bay Meadows Futurity winner I'ma On in 18.11 in the second division of last week's trials and then coming back Saturday to nose out the heavily-favored Coca's Kid.

Coca's Kid had topped last week's qualifiers with a 17.88 clocking and ran back to that time Saturday, finishing just a nose back of Lanty's Jet who ran the 350-yard distance in 17.87, the fastest time of the meeting for a 2-year-old.

Charlie Smith, the all-time leading rider in Los Alamitos history, hustled the swift filly to the lead early when Coca's Kid stumbled slightly coming out of the gate. However, the favorite caught her footing in a hury for jockey John Ward and appeared well on her way to the $70,650 first place prize.

But Smith, who was winning his third race of the evening, kept at Lanty's Jet, winner of a division of the Leo Stakes earlier in the meeting, and his persistence paid off with the nose victory worth $70 grand.

Lanty's Jet, who gave Smith no trouble according to the 43-year-old veteran, returned $15, $4.40 and $3.60 for the upset victory.

Coca's Kid, who was suffering her second successive heart-breaking loss after finishing a neck back of I'ma On in the Bay Meadows Futurity, returned $2.60 and $2.40.

'Snacks' gives Angels food for thought

Strahler's agony a bad memory

By DON MERRY
Staff Writer

DETROIT — Mike Strahler smiled.

It was an easy, effortless smile and it was one of satisfaction.

This was Thursday night in Detroit and the Tigers had just fashioned a 7-6 victory over the Angels.

Strahler was not involved in the decision but he had made his presence felt anyway and now he was basking in the glow of personal triumph.

"I wanted to show those guys that I belong in the big leagues," Strahler announced without rancor.

"They never gave me a chance in the spring . . . they told me I would pitch and then I would sit around for two weeks and do nothing. The Angels are the team that sent me back down to the minors. I had something to prove tonight."

With his adrenalin flowing — even overflowing — Strahler succeeded in doing just that. He mowed down the first 13 Angel hitters he faced and wound up going six and one-third strong innings.

He has become a starting pitcher for Detroit and Mike Strahler is a happy man. The agony that was his in Holtville and Palm Springs this spring has been reduced to just a bad blur on his memory.

Strahler had been moving around the periphery of the major leagues since his first taste of the top in 1970 with the Dodgers.

He spent the entire '72 season on the Dodger varsity but appeared in only 19 games and pitched only 27 innings. His teammates called him "Snacks" because of his penchant for devouring food in great and frequent gulps but they could have called him the invisible man.

Frank Robinson, in fact, once introduced Strahler to manager Walt Alston on the team bus which was transporting the Dodgers from the airport to a hotel in Philadelphia.

"Hey, skip," Robinson intoned with a devilish smile, "I'd like you to meet pitcher Mike Strahler. He's the 25th guy on our 25-man team."

There was laughter all around but deep inside, Strahler probably was crying a little.

Strahler and Robinson were part of the seven-player deal engineered last November between the Dodgers and Angels.

If nothing else, Strahler imagined, he would at least be given a long and careful look during the spring.

The Angels might have given Strahler a careful look but it certainly wasn't long.

He pitched only eight innings during the spring, yielding five earned runs and it was enough to warrant a one-way ticket to Salt Lake City, despite the fact that all his options had been used.

Besides saying the Angels did not present him with a fair chance to display the credentials of his craft in the spring, Strahler also accused pitching coach Tom Morgan of tampering with his pitching motion.

"They wanted me to pitch like Nolan Ryan," Strahler said. "They had me copy his motion and all his movements on the mound. Hell, I was even standing on the rubber looking in for the signs like Nolan does. Well, I'm not Nolan Ryan."

The experiment, needless to day, was a failure — just like Strahler's spring.

When the season opened he was in Salt Lake wondering where his next major league paycheck, if any, was coming from.

A small breakthrough in Strahler's continuing search for b'g league employment occured in April when the Angels traded him to Detroit's Toledo farm in exchange for catcher Charlie Sands.

Strangely, it was Angel announcer Don Drysdale who first touted Tiger manager Billy Martin on Strahler's potential.

Thus, when the Tigers went to Toledo in mid-June for their annual exhibition match, Martin requested that Strahler do the pitching. Just to glean a first hand impression of Strahler's talents, Martin even went to bat once.

He grounded back to Strahler, laughing all the way to first base.

The next day Strahler was summoned to Detroit.

Strahler was ineffective in a couple of relief appearances and the disenchanted Detroiters put him on waivers. But when Cleveland put in a claim, the Tigers withdrew his name and instead gave him a start against the Boston Red Sox.

Strahler responded with a seven-hitter, held Baltimore to three hits in six innings the next time out and has been in the rotation ever since.

"Just being here is great," he says honestly, "but starting is great."

These days, Snacks Strahler is giving the Angels some food for thought.

Dallas rooks defeat Rams

(AP) — The Dallas Cowboy rookies, led by two Hawaii collegians, outscored the Los Angeles Ram rookies 3-1 Saturday in a two-hour controlled scrimmage at the Cowboy' camp in Thousand Oaks.

The scrimmage marked the debut of world 440-yard dash record holder John Smith, who is trying to make the Cowboy squad as a wide receiver despite no collegiate football experience. The former UCLA speedster caught an 11-yard pass from quarterback Dan Werner of Michigan State for a touchdown.

Werner led the Cowboys in passing with eight completions in 17 attempts for 138 yards. James Ray of Georgia hit on 6 of 12 for 83 yards including a five-yard touchdown pass to Golden Richards of Hawaii.

The other Dallas touchdown came on an 11-yard run by Hawaii's Dennis Wychoff the leading rusher with 66 yards on 10 carries.

The Rams' leading ball carrier was Ohio State's Jim Coburn with 83 yards in 17 attempts. Coburn got the only Ram score on a two-yard burst.

Rob Scribner of UCLA netted 57 yards on 9 carries. Scribner also caugh 5 passes for 32 yards.

The Ram passing was shared by the team's second-round pick Ron Jaworski and Washington's Sonny Sixkiller. Jaworski, of Youngstown State, hit on 8 of 21 for 72 yards and Sixkiller 2 of 6 for 19.

"We got a lot out of the scrimmage," said Ram Coach Chuck Knox, who praised Jaworski. "A lot of his passes were dropped that should have been caught."

Sixkiller, a free agent, "showed some poise out there."

"I thought it was an excellent scrimmage," said Dallas coach Tom Landry. "I'd say this is the best rookie camp we've had. I'm talking about people coming in in shape and working hard, and the amazing thing is we've had only one injury of consequence and that was today."

Linebacker Carl Johnson of Tennessee suffered a dislocated shoulder.

Landry said. "We've seen a lot of positive things in this camp."

double and a sacrifice fly. The double was his first extras base hit since July 1.

Even Downing got into it with a two-run double.

But it was his splendid pitching which kept the Cubs off-stride.

"I just had a hard time getting started," he said of the first inning in something of an understatment. "I was just throwing the ball out there. I had a good change-up but I couldn't use it because I was behind everybody."

Downing wild pitched over the Cubs' run in the first ining, but Chicago returned the favor by committing two errors in the second inning which, with Cey's double, accounted for two runs and a lead the Dodgers never relinquished.

They piled up four more runs in the third inning on a walk, singles by Willie Crawford, Steve Garvey, Bill Russell and Dave Lopes, Cey's sacrifice fly and Downing's two-run double.

Ferguson hit his homer in the fourth, tying him with Willie Davis for the club lead.

The Cubs finally chased Downing in the eighth with two singles, a walk and another wild pitch for a run. But he marched off the field to a standing ovation from the big crowd.

Brewer took over and gave up a single for the third run, then fanned three of the last six Cubs for his ninth save.

"I didn't throw too many screwballs," he said of his pet pitch. "I got two strikeouts on fast balls. And — believe this or not — I got the last guy (Rick Monday) on a curve ball, of all pitches."

DODGER DOPE: The run Al Downing surrendered on a wild pitch in the first inning ended the Dodgers' string of consecutive scoreless innings at 20 . . . The last time the Dodgers had more than two shutouts in a row was in 1966, when they blanked four clubs in a row . . . Steve Garvey entered Saturday night's game with a .325 batting average. A month ago he was hitting .228 . . . Bill Buckner took an eight-game hitting streak into Saturday night's game . . . Willie Davis entered with a seven-game streak . . . Coach Monty Basgall is battling the flu but insisted on remaining in uniform on the Dodger bench . . . Pitching today's 2 o'clock game will be Claude Osteen and Rick Reuschel, both 10-5 . . . It will be the final day of Helmet weekend. Again, all kids, 14 and under, will receive free Dodger batting helmets . . . Immediately after the game the Dodgers fly to Pittsburgh for the start of a seven-game road grip. The Dodgers will play three games in Pittsburgh and four in St. Louis before taking three days off for the All-Star game.

Ragtime in close duel

Combined News Services

HONOLULU — One of the closest finishes in TransPacific race history is expected this morning at 8 a.m. when the first boats are expected to pass the finish line at Honolulu's Diamond Head.

The 62-foot sloop Ragtime of the Long Beach Yacht Club and the 73-foot ketch Windward Passage were less than a half mile apart when they reported to press headquarters here Saturday.

At that time, they were both 100 miles out of Honolulu, with winds at 20 knots and overcast skies.

Officials thought that the two boats would reach the finish line within minutes of each other, in a near photo-finish.

Windward Passage, skippered by Mark Johnson of the New York and Lahaina Yacht Clubs, has held the overall lead in the 2,225 mile race since July 7.

Windward Passage holds the record for the race of nine days, nine hours, six minutes and 48 seconds established when she won the race in 1971.

Cards clinch title share

The Great Western Cardinals clinched at least a tie for the Connie Mack League title Saturday night with a 9-4 victory over Coletto Ford.

In the second game of the doubleheader, Bruce Schiff scored with none out in the seventh inning on an infield hit to give Mar Star a 1-0 victory over the Douglas Jets.

The Cardinals win upped their record to 15-2 and was sparked by the hitting of Jack Neimeyer, Shaughn Lewicki and Randy Vanderhook. Neimeyer contributed a pair of hits and two RBI; Lewiciki, two hits and three RBI; and Vanderhook, a pinch hit triple that scored two.

Mike Ongorato of Mary Star struck out 10 and did not allow a runner to reach second base. Ongorato walked two and gave up four hits.

Revson scores first GP win

SILVERSTONE, England (UPI) — Peter Revson, a 34-year-old heir to a cosmetic fortune, won his first formula one grand prix race Saturday when he scored by a comfortable margin over Sweden's Ronnie Peterson in a British Gran Prix classic that was marred by an eight-car accident in the very first lap.

Revson, at the wheel of a Works McLaren, thus became only the fourth American to win a formula one grand prix, a series that has been dominated by European and South American drivers. His previous best this year was second place in the South African GP, fourth in the Spanish and fifth at Monte Carlo.

The last American to win a gran prix was Mario Andretti of Nazareth, Pa., who won the South African event in 1971. Before that it was Ritchie Bunter back in 1965 with the Mexican GP.

Revson's time for the 200-mile race was one hour, 20 minutes and 18.5 seconds. He averaged 131.75 m.p.h.

The handsome bachelor from Redondo Beach, Calif., who will race in the Can-Am series at Watkins Glen, N.Y., next weekend, picked up nine points for his grand prix victory and vaulted into sixth place in the world driver standings with 20 points. There are six events remainging in the 15-race world championship series which is concluded with the U.S. Grand Prix at Watkins Glen in October.

Jackie Stewart, a two-time champions form Scotland, who had a 20-yard lead before the race was halted for an hour and 40 minutes finished down the field. Emerson Fittipaldi of Brazil, trailing Stewart by one point, 44-43, in the standings, did not finish. Neither driver picked up points since these are alloted only for the first six finishers.

The race got off to a near tragic start on one of the fastest tracks in race-crazy Britain when Jody Scheckter, the 23-year-old South African who leads the formula 5000 series in the U.S., went out of control and an eight-car pile-up ensued, reducing the original starting field of 28 to 19. Briton Jackie Oliver was not involved in the crash, but did not start second time around.

Rouff captures formula 3 race

SILVERTON, England (AP) — Tony Rouff of Newport Beach, Calif., captured the curtain-raising International Formula Three race prior to the start of Saturday's British Grand Prix, even though Johnny Gerber of Mexico crossed the finished line first.

Rouff, driving a GRD, completed the course in 31 minutes, 8.4 seconds for an average speed of 112.79 m.p.h. He was also credited with the fastest lap of the race — 114.66 m.p.h.

Gerber, whose Brabham led for most of the race's 20 laps, was penalized one minute for jumping the flag at the start and was place 17th in the 25-car field.

Russell Wood of Britain was second in a March and Australian Alan Jones third in another GRD.

Hawk rally gains split

KERMAN — The Long Beach Nitehawks scored the winning run with one out in the seventh inning to take a 2-1 decision in the second game of a doubleheader with RKP of Fresno Saturday night.

RKP of Fresno took the first game, 6-2. The series concludes today with a single game.

Jimmy Herrick scored on a dropped throw to first base in the seventh to tie the score of the second game and then Jerry Flory drove home Bill Greene to give pitcher Jim Knott the win.

Wigginton runs 6.03 in drags

ENGLISHTOWN, N.J. (AP) — Bill Wigginton of Chalmette, La., set a national quarter-mile record Saturday to lead qualification activity for today's $300,000 Summer Nationals championships at Raceway Park.

Wigginton, a 28-year-old drag racing veteran, drove his Lousiana-based fuel dragster to a 6.03-second clocking in the closing moments of Friday's qualifying action, and returned Saturday to make the mark official by recording the required backup run of 6.09 seconds. His speed was 238.72 m.p.h.

The 6.03 eclipses the record set at Gainesville, Fla., last March by Jim Bucher of Cincinnati.

The record run came in Wigginton's first all-out run in the 1800-horsepower, rear-engine dragster. He was assigned to the driving chores just a few days before the start of the National Hot Rod Association event.

The Summer Nationals classic, fourth of eight national meets on NHRA's annual schedule, has attracted more than 600 top-ranking drivers from across the United States and Canada who will be competing Sunday for championships in seven separate eliminator categories.

U.S. juniors whip Germans

HEIDENHEIM, West Germany (AP) — The U.S. junior track and field team, sparked by a world record-tying performance by its men's 400-meter relay team, scored an impressive victory over West Germany Saturday in the initial stop during the first trip abroad by an American junior squad.

The U.S. men defeated the Germans 132-80, while their female counterparts won 80-66.

The world senior record, also held by the U.S., is 38.2.

Slim margin for error on Q-horse

BUD TUCKER

You will get an argument, if you open your mouth on the subject, as to which is the most intelligent of the species.

Human beings generally get a call but by the way certain affairs of the world are conducted, they are by no means a shoo-in.

Chimps now and then display indications they are not altogether dolts. These intriguing creatures ride bicycles and fit round pegs into appropriate holes and there have been claims of chimps playing the piano, which may explain some of the music currently infesting the airwaves.

Dogs, in the opinion of many, are far and away the smartest animal. Rolling over, playing dead and shaking a paw are not acts to be easily dismissed.

Of course, there will always be the guy who stands up to respectfully submit that the horse is endowed with considerable intelligence. There is a vast difference of opinion in this area inasmuch as horses often determine certain habits of human beings, such as eating and wearing clothes and sleeping in places sheltered from the elements.

The subject arose the other night at Los Alamitos and since it was after the fifth race, the horse was not getting the best of it. As a matter of fact, there were a few present who were growing suspicious that certain horses were not only stupid, they were downright lazy.

THE CAUSE OF THE HORSE, however, was championed by a young man named Danny Cardoza who presented rather impressive credentials. At the moment, Cardoza is one of the few jockeys on the face of the earth who ride both quarterhorses and thoroughbreds. This involves working throughout the afternoon and into the evening and a day embracing considerably more than eight hours.

At any rate, Cardoza spoke passionately in behalf of the horse.

"Horses," he said, "are smart. For one thing, you can teach a horse anything you can teach a dog."

A guy wanted to know the last time Danny saw a horse enter the water to retrieve a fallen duck, but this quite obviously had nothing to do with anything.

"I KNOW HORSES ARE SMART," Cardoza said, "because of the way they behave in the gate. They know exactly what is going on and they react to the jockey. thoroughbreds and quarter-

"I mean, if the rider is tense and nervous, the horse senses it and gets upset too. If the jock freezes, forget it. The horse may never leave the gate."

Naturally, the foregoing brought up the matter of a guy riding both thoroughbreds and quarterhorses and the difference involved.

"It's easier to make a mistake with the thoroughbreds," Danny replied. "There's so much more time during a race. By the same token, though, you can make a mistake with the thoroughbreds and have some time to correct it. You pull a boner on a quarterhorse and it's too late. Boom, the race is over."

A bystander asked why more jockeys do not ride both sorts of animals.

"Mostly," Cardoza replied, "it has to do with weight. You can ride a little heavier over here. A guy who has to battle the weight all the time can be happier riding quarterhorses."

OTHERWISE, HAPPINESS IS LARGELY a matter of opinion.

"There is more money over there with the thoroughbreds," Danny explained, "but I like the people better over here. They are more down to earth and easier to talk to."

Of course, no human is as easy to engage in conversation as a horse.

"That's right," Cardoza agreed. "You get in the gate with a horse and lean over and whisper what you want him to do and he'll do it. That is, unless he has a mind of his own, in which case he'll do what he thinks is best."

This would seem to place the judgement of the horse at least even with that of most humans, close behind the chimp and slightly ahead of the dog.

Joe DiMaggio moments before hitting streak ended

CLEVELAND, 1941

England and Russia have just signed a mutual aid pact, but Chancellor Hitler's forces keep pushing northward and are approaching Leningrad.

In the United States, the great Yankee Clipper, Joe DiMaggio, has a hitting streak that he keeps pushing and it's approaching 60. DiMag has his safely in 56 consecutive games. This incredible hitting habit has easily surpassed all records ever set, including those of George Sisler of the St. Louis Browns and Willie Keeler of the old Baltimore Orioles.

The entire baseball world follows Joe every day as he hits and hits as if he will never be stopped.

Here on a Thursday night at Municipal Stadium in Cleveland, the largest crowd ever to see a night major league baseball game has gathered. All 67,468 of them want to see if Joe can make it 57.

Streaks are nothing new for Joe. In 1933 DiMaggio hit safely in 61 consecutive games for the San Francisco Seals in the Coast League.

Tonight, Al Smith, a lefthander, is on the mound for the Tribe. DiMaggio is up in the first inning. He smashes one down the line at third. Third sacker Ken Keltner backhands it beautifully and throws Joe out at first.

The next two times up Joe walks and again grounds out to Keltner.

Now we're in the eighth inning. Bases are loaded and there is one out. Jim Bagby, now pitching for Cleveland, works the count to one and one on DiMaggio.

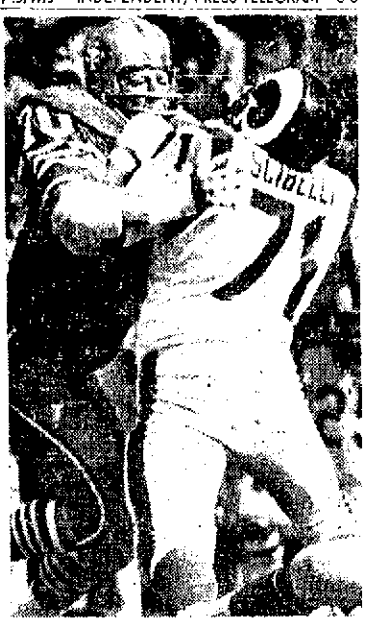

Here's the pitch. Joe hits the ball sharply. Lou Boudreau, the Indians' classy shortstop, moves in front of the ball. He finds it and flips to Ray Mack at second. Mack whips it to Oscar Grimes for a double play.

Suddenly Municipal Stadium is in shock. Everybody in the ball park knows that the Great Streak has ended.

For DiMaggio it is the first game in more than two months that he hasn't gotten a base hit.

It's July 17, 1941 and the Yankees have won another game. But their super player, Joltin' Joe DiMaggio, has finally been thwarted.

Lucky 13th for Scibelli?

JOE SCIBELLI, Charley Kreuger say hello

Jolly Joe Scibelli, one of the Rams' offensive captains, enters his 13th pro season today when he reports to Fullerton State, but he has all the cagerness of a rookie and a trimness that wasn't too noticeable the past few seasons. Before he passes through the portals of Fort Knox, the jolly guard was interrogated about past and present events regarding what he hopes will be a lucky 13th campaign.

As one of the Ram leaders, what is your opinion of all the quarterback fuss involving the acquisition of John Hadl from the Chargers and the subsequent stormy departure of Roman Gabriel?

"I'm not avoiding that question, but let's put it this way. I've never played with Hadl before. I've played against the

HANK HOLLINGWORTH

Chargers when Hadl was quarterback, but since I was on the Rams' offensive team, the only opportunity I had to watch Hadl was from the bench. During that time, me and Kenny Iman and the other offensive players, were too worn out to watch very much. We were just trying to catch our breath.

"As for Roman, I've had good times and bad times with him. I sure wish him luck, though, with his new team at Philadelphia. He did a lot for the Rams.

"Thinking about things in the present, I feel we'll be greatly improved with Hadl. I say that only because sometimes you need a new look. Hadl's record proves he's a good man. So was Gabe. But Hadl is the new look.

"Speaking personally, I know as an offensive lineman I'll do everything to protect John as much as I did Roman."

HOW DO YOU FEEL about Gabriel's derogatory remarks about Ram players? In essence, he intimated some Rams weren't putting out George Allen's famous 110 per cent.

"Gabe remarked upon our lack of success last year and that, for the most part, the Ram players' selfishness was a contributing factor. Well, that's the way it came out in print, but I don't think he meant it quite that way. It was just unfortunate it was interpreted that way. Gabe has since apologized, so I think that takes care of that."

What effect did Roman's remarks have on Ram players generally?

"It didn't set too well originally, but when Gabe apologized, most of the guys accepted it and felt like me that he was quoted incorrectly. Pro football is a cold business. I'm just sorry Gabe had to leave us under such strained circumstances."

WHEN YOU PLAY Gabe's Philadelphia Eagles — you won't next season, but if you ever do — will Roman get any special treatment from the Ram defense?

"Let me put it this way. The Eagles' quarterback last season, John Reaves, was sacked 38 times. Gabriel was sacked 16 times last year with the Rams. I'd say Gabe has his work cut out for him even if the defenses are moderately passionate."

Do you believe in weightlifting, as most athletes do?

"Things have changed. For 10 years I lifted crates at my father's produce market in Springfield, Mass. I guess that's the same as lifting weights in the gym. But since I made my fulltime home in Long Beach two years ago, I haven't bothered with that.

"I will say that weightlifting is related to a position such as mine as an offensive lineman. It helps the upper body and shoulders, what you need to block. But distance running is more important to me than weightlifting. It improves your stamina ... and that's what counts the most to me."

Five of the Rams' six preseason games will be with teams which were in the 1972 playoffs. Is this good or would you rather play the softer touches?

"I like playing the tough clubs. You have to play and beat the contenders if your club is going to amount to anything. Not only that, but you get a better idea of just how strong your club is. I don't think the fans should get too upset if we don't do so well in the preseason games because coach Chuck Knox intends to play a lot of newcomers. The veterans won't be getting as much playing time as they did when George Allen was here."

WHAT ABOUT all the commotion regarding drug abuse? What are your feelings?

"It's true some players have to use pills to get up for a game, but it's not a universal thing. What makes me mad about this whole drug issue is that the New York Times accused four NFL players of being involved in drug traffic. If that paper had to release the story it did, it should have gone further and named people. Instead, it indicted all of us.

"I won't take a urine test, either. I think it's ridiculous.

"It might be psychological for some players to take pills, but I don't know because I'm not involved. I'll say this, though — most NFL players have pride, and maybe pride for some is to be at their very best on the field. So, maybe they think pep pills make them the best. I sure won't take any, though, because I don't need or want any part of them."

RAM SAFETY Dave Elmendorf was as eager and enthusiastic as Jolly Joe on the eve of training camp. The third year pro from Texas A&M thinks the Rams are definite championship threat this season, but he cautioned, "I did last year, too, and we didn't even play .500 ball."

New coach Knox claims your area — the defensive secondary — is one of two places which need immediate improvement. What do you think?

"I never disagree with a coach. He's right; we didn't do well last year."

You certainly didn't. The Rams ranked 22nd in the league in pass defense. What was the problem?

"I wish I could blame it on the coach. But I don't know. For some reason we didn't take care of our duties too well. But I can't account for the reason."

Do you think you can improve last year's record?

"We sure as heck better. Or else I'll be looking for a job."

WHEN YOU started two years ago with the Rams you were a rookie free safety. When Richie Letitbon departed last season, Tommy Prothro installed you as a strong safety. What's the difference?

"The free safety plays 10 yards or so in back of the line of scrimmage and he can roam anywhere. The strong safety is about six yards deep and supports the line. I hope coach Knox realizes that I like where I am at strong safety now. I don't like to roam."

You played offense and defense at Texas A&M and in high school. Which do you prefer?

"I used to be a running back and that was fun then, but defense is much more enjoyable to me now. I love to intercept passes and tackle."

Excluding Hadl, who do you think is the best quarterback in the NFL?

"I've only been in the league two years, so I'm really no judge. But I've been greatly impressed with Bob Griese. John Brodie really shows me a lot when I watch him on TV, but he never can beat us. You read a lot about Joe Namath's off-the-field exploits and tend to forget his great accomplishments on the field. He's a super passer and ball handler. Personally, I think Namath's THE best."

Do you think it'll take you long to become acclimated to a new coach?

"If you mean by that, problems — no! I know he'll be working the tail off the defensive backs, but we were so poor last year that's to be expected. In our early familiarization program, he impressed me very much and our relationship should be great — IF the other teams don't throw 20 touchdown passes against us again. THEN, I'll have problems."

TREVINO CONQUERS TROON BUT 13 STROKES TOO LATE

TROON, Scotland (AP) — Lee Trevino, the deposed king, finally beat the Terrors of Troon when it didn't matter any more Saturday and groaned: "Hey man. I haven't made enough money to get out of town."

The self-styled Supermex stroked a casual four-under-par 68 on Troon's 7,064-yard layout to finish the British Open Golf Championship with a 289 total, 13 strokes behind winner Tom Weiskopf. That left him one over par and his hopes of becoming the first American to win the coveted crown for three years running had disappeared.

"It just wasn't my week," confessed Trevino. "It just was not my kind of course. There seemed no way I could get myself charged up."

Trevino said that with no pressure in the last round he could practically put the ball in the cup with his eyes shut.

"I'm a little sick that I wasn't up there with the leaders," he admitted. "But I had a feeling this was the way it was going to go.

"I told my caddie, Willie Aitchison, before the start that it wasn't going to be me. I never said anything more right in my whole life."

Bill Buhler: Dodgers' repairman

By GORDON VERRELL
Staff Writer

"Hey, Primo," yells Manny Mota, "you give me rubdown, si?"

BILL BUHLER
Medicine man

"Hey, Doc," moans Bill Buckner, "how 'bout a pad for the knee. I banged it up again."

"Bill, where's the tape?" asks Pete Richert. "Gotta wrap some on the foot."

... and on it goes ...

A routine day in the life of Bill Buhler, 48, part-time high school athletic official, tennis buff, family man, Long Beach resident, stickler for physical conditioning and trainer for the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Like a guy who gains a certain amount of satisfaction after selling a big account or putting the final touches on a big business deal, Bill Buhler sighs of relief each night the Dodgers trot onto the field. In a lot of ways they couldn't make it without him.

He rolls on yards of tape every night, massages the starting pitcher, gets the whirlpool water just the proper temperature, pries a splinter out of an outfielder's thumb and helps loosen up someone's stiff knee. He even sometimes finds time to administer to a sports writer who might have overstayed the cocktail hour the evening before.

Pills?

"We have two physicians, Dr. Robert Woods and Dr. Frank Jobe," explains Buhler when asked about one of the sports' touchiest topics these days. "What they prescribe, I dispense."

Buhler came West with the Dodgers in 1958 and has celebrated pennants and swoons alongside the players.

He suffered with Sandy Koufax's miseries and administered to Tommy Davis and Al Ferrara after they suffered broken bones that never again allowed them to return to what they were before their injuries. But it was Maury Wills' aches and pains during his race against Ty Cobb's stolen base record that Buhler says caused him the most grief.

"Maury's hip was just unbelievable it was so bruised," said Buhler, recalling the 1962 season. "Every day we wrapped it so he wouldn't bruise it more. But every time he'd slide it would bruise. He wound up taking a thigh pad and taping it on the hip. It was amazing the way he could keep going.

"Fractures, injuries like that, you learn to live with. But Wills' bruise, that was really something."

Buhler reports to Dodger Stadium some six hours before the first pitch. He usually has patients waiting, too.

"It works out to eight or nine hours a day at the park," Buhler said in his well-equipped training room next to the Dodgers' clubhouse. "We have all the equipment, even an x-ray machine. No other club has its own x-ray equipment."

Buhler has been in the Dodger organization since 1952. He spent five years in the minor leagues, one in Elmira, N.Y., and four at St. Paul, before joining the Dodgers in Brooklyn in 1957.

"I wrote a letter to the Dodgers," Buhler said when asked how he joined the organization. "I wasn't even that much of a baseball fan but a good friend of mine was Guy Wellman (Dodger scout) when we were at Valparaiso University."

Buhler says the quality of training has improved in the last 10 years, primarily because it's now being offered as a college major.

"A number of fellows in the major leagues have no formal education," Buhler pointed out. "They learned mostly by apprenticeship. But now guys are going through college."

Buhler got into training about as early as one can.

"I was the trainer at Valparaiso my freshman year in 1947," he recalled. "I did all sports. But I didn't always want to be a trainer.

"What I really wanted was to become the greatest football coach of all time. I didn't make it."

...And so was everyone else

The quarterback was a lady

By ROBERT BOHLE
Staff Writer

As the free safety jogged off the practice field for a rest, one couldn't help but notice the braided ponytail hanging out the back of the gold and green football helmet.

A protege of Tim Rossovich? No, a member of the Los Angeles Dandelions, one of eight womens professional football teams in the United States.

But if any onlooker at Saturday morning's open practice at Vets Stadium had any doubts about the compatibility of women and football, they didn't have them for long.

The Dandelions dispelled all doubts with an intra-squad scrimmage that included all the hard-hitting football action that anyone would want to see.

Not a bunch of women's libbers out to prove a point, all the girls on the team just like to play football.

"I like the hitting and the knocking down," explained 19-year-old Lesa Thomas. "I like the sounds of the pads and helmets hitting together."

The girls on the team were recruited through ads in daily and college newspapers around the Los Angeles area. The Dandelions have been practicing for about four months, three days a week.

Halfback Joyce Johnson, a graduate of Norwalk High School and now a student at Cerritos College, has always played or been interested in football.

"I guess I like to play because I'm competitive," the 21-year-old physical education major explained. "I like to play basketball, too. I would still play even if we didn't get paid."

Not a girl on the team is an ardent women's libber. But they are all aware that what they are doing isn't accepted well by everybody.

"It's OK with me if they take it lightly," Ms. Johnson continued. "But not if they make fun of it. Most of the girls I've talked to about it think it's great, but the guys, especially the younger ones, just laugh."

"Yeah, if people would be more open-minded about it," added Ms. Thomas, "they would probably enjoy it. But they just see women and football and turn off."

The Dandelions play their first game next Sunday, July 22, at Veterans Stadium against the Dallas Bluebonnets. The bluebonnets have already played one game and that experience should help.

Tickets for the game are now available at Ticketron and all Liberty and Mutual agencies.

"I have absolutely no idea what it's going to be like Sunday," admitted Ms. Johnson. "I can't even guess who might win. All I hope is that we can prove to some people that his is not a joke.

"We've put in a lot of time into this," she added, "and we wouldn't be devoting all this time if we weren't serious about it."

Asked if she felt that her femininity was threatened by playing football, thought to be a bastion of the American male, she sat up straighter and bristled, "Yeah, that's what I wanted to say. A lot of guys feel that you're not a woman anymore if you put on a football uniform.

"That was my only fear about playing," she continued. "I worried about being called not feminine or something. I may not be the most feminine thing around, but I'm sure not what a lot of people call us."

She then tucked her long brown hair up into the helmet and headed back into the game. As the girl she replaced walked off the field, she yelled: "Hey coach, are we going to have oxygen for the game next Sunday?" She flopped down on the grass and began repairs on the tape she used to protect her fingernails.

Pirates flatten Giants

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Al Oliver's two-run homer and two-run singles by Rennie Stennett and Manny Sanguillen highlighted a six-run uprising with two out in the second inning that powered the Pittsburgh Pirates to a 7-2 baseball victory over the San Francisco Giants Saturday.

The Pirates erupted for eight hits in the big inning, sending 12 batters to the plate against starter Ron Bryant (13-7) and Don Carrithers. All six runs were charged to Bryant.

Winner Jim Rooker (3-2) held the Giants hitless until the fifth, when Gary Thomasson's leadoff double and Chris Speier's pinch single produced a run.

Richie Zisk started the second with an infield hit and two-out singles by Dal Maxvill and Rooker loaded the bases. Stennett delivered a two-run single, with the runners moving up on Matthews' throwing error to the plate. Sanguillen followed with another two-run single and Oliver belted his 14th homer.

Carlton flashes Cy Young form

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Steve Carlton helped his own cause with a two-run homer Saturday, pitching the Philadelphia Phillies to a 7-0 three-hit victory over the Houston Astros.

Carlton yielded only Doug Rader's second-inning single, Bob Watson's single in the seventh and Jesus Alou's pinch single in the eighth to even his record at 9-9.

The Phillies goot two runs in the first when starter Jerry Reuss (11-7) balked in one run and Mike Anderson drove in the other after singles by Bill Robinson and Terry Harmon and Willie Montanez' double.

Larry Bowa singled and scored on Carlton's fifth career home run in the second and the Phillies chased Reuss with singles by Montanez, Greg Luzinski and Anderson, boosting the lead to 5-0 in the third.

Three-run ninth beats Reds

CINCINNATI (UPI) — Jerry Grote led off the ninth inning with a triple and scored on Johnny Bench's passed ball to break a 2-2 tie and Felix Millan put the game on ice with a two-run homer two outs later to give the New York Mets a 5-2 victory Saturday night over the Cincinnati Reds.

Buzz Capra came on in the bottom of the ninth inning to blank the Reds and preserve lefthander George Stone's fifth victory against three losses.

Before his departure for a pinch-hitter in the ninth inning, Stone was tagged for nine hits, one of them a fourth-inning home run by Andy Kosco, his first of the season.

Evans' 26th homer strongarms Expos

ATLANTA (AP) — Darrell Evans moved back into a tie for the major league home run lead by belting his 26th homer, highlighting a four-run rally that gave the Atlanta Braves a 4-1 victory over the Montreal Expos Saturday night.

Evans' blast over the center field fence followed a single by Marty Perez, Atlanta's first hit off loser Balor Moore (4-10) and tied him with Pittsburgh's Willie Stargell for the home run lead.

Hank aaron followed Evans' homer with a double and Dusty Baker singled him to third. Aaron scored when Dick Dietz singled and Baker came home when Johnny Oates forced Dietz at second.

Rojas' key hits, Busby's pitching subdues Yankees

NEW YORK (AP) — Cookie Rojas drove in two runs with a homer and triple to lead Steve Busby and the Kansas City Royals to a 4-2 victory over the New York Yankees Saturday.

Busby, (7-9) left in the ninth inning after allowing seven hits, the first two of them in the fourth when the Yankees scored their first run on a walk to Roy White and singles by Ron Blomberg and Graig Nettles.

Rojas, the second batter in the game, jumped on the first pitch from George Medich (6-5) and lined the high-inside fast ball into the left field stands for his fourth homer of the baseball season.

Rojas led off the fourth with a single, moved to second on Medich's wild pickoff throw and scored on Ed Kirkpatrick's single.

The Royals added two runs in the seventh. Lou Piniella doubled, Kurt Bevacqua walked and they moved up on a sacrifice. After Fred Patek popped out, Piniella came home on a wild pitch, then Rojas tripled to the right-center field wall on a 3-0 pitch, chasing Medich.

Busby was replaced by Doug Bird after Nettles singled and Johnny Calliso doubled to start the ninth. Nettles scored New York's second run on Gene Michael's groundout.

ANGELS—

Gates Brown. Then ball one.

And then it happened.

Wild pitch. Ike Brown scores. Tie game. Angel dugout can't believe its collective eyes.

Sells walks Brown intentionally bringing up Al Kaline.

And then it happened again.

Wild pitch. Brinkman scores, Tigers win, 2-1. Angel dugout in state of shock.

"That," said Winkles with a pained expression and sipping on a beer when he really would have preferred a cup of hemlock, "was our toughest loss of the year ... and we've had some dandies.

"It was one of those giveaway jobs ... and I don't have any answers. You can't explain something like that."

Nobody even tried.

Sells sat smoking a cigarette and staring straight ahead into his locker.

One intrepid soul asked if his pitches got away — an obvious statement of fact.

"Yeah," Sells agreed in a voice that was only a whisper.

The question before the house now is what does Rudy May have to do to win.

Wednesday in Baltimore he was the pitcher of record as the Angels carried an 8-3 advantage into the bottom of the ninth.

The Orioles staged a remarkable rally to tie the game and although the Angels managed to win in extra innings, May was deprived of the victory.

Saturday, he nursed a precarious 1-0 advantage — supplied on Meoli's first major league home run — from the fourth inning on.

After yielding nine hits and stranding eight Tigers in the first five innings, May settled admirably and retired 10 in a row before Ike Brown led off the incredulous ninth.

So, May not only lost his fifth shutout he also lost a win and gained a defeat.

He would be the first to agree that it just didn't add up.

ANGEL ANGLES: The loss was the fourth in a row for the tired, slumping Angels and left them with a 6-7 mark for the road trip which concludes today with a televised (KTLA, 10:30 a.m.) match pitting Nolan Ryan (10-11) against Jim Perry (8-9) ... Ryan continues to lead the majors in strikeouts with 203 ... Veteran coach Jimmy Reese handled first base duties in the opening inning, making his debut on national television ... Frank Robinson was given the day off Saturday ... Detroit's ninth inning rally which consisted on one infield hit, three walks and two wild pitches, enabled Joe Coleman to improve his record to 14-8 ... May is now 6-7 and feeling snake-bitten ... Gallagher was laying supine covered by two towels and Robinson was fanning him with another towel when Meoli returned to the dugout after his first major league homer ... At first, the Angel bench gave Meoli the silent treatment, then burst into applause and back-slapping ... his drive carried about 370 feet to right-center, just clearing the eight-foot high wire fence ... Detroit's victory was its fifth in a row.

Brown homers in Brewer win

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Bobby Mitchell's three-run homer and Ollie Brown's solo shot backed Jim Colborn's three-hit pitching and the Milwaukee Brewers defeated the Oakland Athletics 5-1 Saturday night.

Colborn was pitching no-hit baseball until Ray Fosse lined his fifth homer of the baseball season and third in his last three games leading off the sixth. Ninth-inning singles by Bill North and Sal Bando were the other hits.

Milwaukee took a 1-0 first inning lead as Dave May singled, moved to third on a double by George Scott and scored on a wild pitch by loser Dave Hamilton (5-3).

The Brewers chased Hamilton in the second on a single by John Briggs, a walk and Mitchell's second homer since being called up from Evansville July 2. Brown hit his seventh homer off reliever Paul Lindblad in the third, making it 5-0.

Palmer collects first win since June 26

CHICAGO (UPI) — A clutch relief job by Bob Reynolds saved Jim Palmer's first victory since June 26th Saturday night as the Baltimore Orioles survived the Chicago White Sox' three-run ninth inning rally to register a 5-4 victory and move within 1½ games of the New York Yankees.

Palmer took a five-hitter into the ninth but the White Sox scored three runs and had the bases loaded with one out when Reynolds got Joe Deough to hit into a game-ending double play.

Bill Melton led off the ninth for his 13th homer for chicago's second run.

Allen eligible to return but he's not ready

CHICAGO (AP) — Dick Allen, who was eligible to get off the disabled list and rejoin the Chicago White Sox Saturday, might not return to action until after the All-Star break.

"He's not ready at all," said Manager Chuck Tanner. "In fact, he won't go on the road trip with us after this weekend."

Bosox knock off Texas

BOSTON (UPI) — Carl Yastrzemski's triple and a single by Orlando Cepeda in the eighth inning Saturday enabled the Boston Red Sox to eke out a 6-5 win over the Texas Rangers.

The Rangers, down 4-0 at one point, tied the game in the top of the eighth on a single by Alex Johnson, a pair of infield outs, and a wild pitch by Boston reliever Bob Bolin.

But Luis Aparicio opened the bottom half of the inning with a single and scored easily when Yastrzemski pounded a triple to centerfield. Cepeda followed with a bouncing single to left that scored Yastrzemski.

Tidrow shuts out Twins

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — Dick Tidrow's four-hit pitching and Rusty Torres' two-run homer led Cleveland to a 3-0 baseball victory over Minnesota Saturday, the Indians' third straight triumph over the Twins.

The Twins, suffering through a disastrous home stand in which they have lost nine of 13 games, never got a runner past first base.

Tidrow, (7-9) walked only one batter in besting Jim Kaat, 9-9, who gave up only five hits in eight innings. One of them, however, was Torres' homer in the seventh inning for a 3-0 lead. Chris Chambliss was on base with a walk when Torres reached the left field pavillion with a 390-foot blast.

Three veterans tie for Robinson lead

ROBINSON, Ill. (AP) — Three veteran pros — Dean Beman, Charles Courtney and Dick Rhyan — battered par Saturday to share the 54-hole lead of the Shrine-Robinson Golf Open with 209, nine strokes under par.

Rhyan, 38, who never has won a tournament, led the charge with a 32-33-65.

Courtney, 32, whose last victory was the Tallahassee Open in 1969, fashioned a 32-34-66. Beman, 35, winner of the 1972 Quad Cities Open, authored a 31-36-37.

While some front-runners fell back in the sweltering heat at the 6,555-yard Crawford County Country Club Course, others came on strong and a total of 24 players were separated by only four strokes as the tournament entered the final round today.

The logjam could well provide a fifth consecutive playoff at Robinson to determine the winner.

A stroke out of the lead with 205 was Andy North, a tender-foot pro from Gainesville, Fla., who shot a 67. Grouped at 206, each carding 68s, were Bob Lewis Jr., Bob Dickson and Bunky Henry.

Larry Hinson, who had the best round of the day, a 64, was bracketed at 207 with Labron Harris, who won at Robinson in 1971, George Archer, Pete Brown and Babe Hiskey.

Hiskey and Beman were among a half-dozen players who shared the 36-hole lead.

Others in that group faltered.

Charles Coody slid to a 76 for 208; Bobby Greenwood and Mike Morley each posted 72 to be at 209 and defending champion Grier Jones had a 73 for 210.

Out of the field of 83 for the final rounds, 65 players were under par for 54 holes.

That included Long Beach's Terry Small, who shot a 68 Saturday for a three-round total of 211, only seven shots behind the leaders. Unfortunately, there are 54 other golfers in the same or a better position than Small.

WEISKOPF—

tournaments in the world."

Always before, Weiskopf's temper had kept him from achieving the greatness most observers thought was his.

"Potentially, he's been an awful good player for an awful long time," Nicklaus said.

In the last two months he broke through, winning the colonial in Fort Worth, the Kemper in Charlotte and the Philadelphia Classic. He was second in Atlanta, third in the U.S. Open and fifth in the American Golf Classic.

Through that string Weiskopf talked almost daily of his new-found maturity.

And he mentioned it obliquely after winning the oldest of the World's titles.

"I was in complete control of myself," Weiskopf said. "I was never really worried.

"Not that I don't respect the ability of Johnny, or Jack, or Neil, but I just knew that no matter what happened, I was gonna win."

"I just wish my dad had been alive to see me win the British Open," he said.

"My dad lived for golf. He died just after the Masters tournament in early April, where I finished a poor 34th.

"Two days before my father died he told me that he knew I'd soon win one of the big ones.

"He would have been proud of me today."

Pfeil upset victim in Trans-Miss.

HUTCHINSON, Kan. (UPI) — NCAA runnerup Gary Koch birdied the last two holes for a 2-up victory over USC's Mark Pfeil and Guy Cullins of Denton, Tex., roared from behind to win the last three holes Saturday and whip Mike Milligan of Bloomington, Ill., 1-up, in the semifinals of the 70th annual Trans-Mississippi amateur golf tournament.

Koch, of Temple Terrace, Fla., chipped within two inches for a birdie on No. 17, then ran in a 20-foot putt on No. 18 to close out Pfeil, who knocked defending champion Ben Crenshaw out of the tournament in the quarterfinals.

Cullins, former North Texas State golfer, birdied Nos. 16 and 17 with 15-foot and two foot putts to even the match against Milligan, who is a junior on the University of Houston golf team.

At 18, both tried to give the match away. Milligan hammered a 6-iron into a plum thicket behind the green and had to take an unplayable lie. Cullins, trying to be careful, bladed an 8-iron into a sand trap, but dropped a 10-foot par putt to win the match.

Koch and Cullins will meet in the 36-hole finals today.

Falk clinches women's golf

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Katie Ahern Falk of Milwaukee, the Wisconsin women's champion, won the Women's Western Golf Assn. tournament Saturday 5-and-4 over Texas teen-ager Brenda Goldsmith.

Mrs. Falk, 26, went 4-up on the first nine holes of the 36-hole final at the Maple Bluff Country Club course and went on to beat her 17-year-old opponent from San Antonio with a par on the 32nd hole.

Lakewood, Shua vie in crucial

The uniforms might be different, but it will look like a rerun of the Moore League title decider of last spring when Lakewood and Shua tangle today at Blair Field for the American Legion Harbor League championships.

Lakewood (11-3) insured itself of a chance for a share of the title by defeating San Pedro, 5-0, Saturday behind the steady pitching for Floyd Chiffer.

League-leading Shua, comprised primarily of players off Millikan High's Moore League title team, will carry a 12-2 record into the 2 p.m. game.

Chiffer fanned eight and allowed only one walk in the eight innings he worked Saturday. Doug Slettvet and Randy Vanderhook each had three hits for the winners.

In Saturday's only other Legion game, Carson pushed across a run in the bottom of the ninth to nip Peterson, 6-5.

Rob Fishman, on second with one out, streaked home on a hit by Dan Cisneros and was able to score easily as the relay throw from third went astray.

Rob VanLue was 3-for-5 for Carson.

The freeway drive

Hitting a driver from the fairway can be risky, like turning your paycheck over to your wife. Maybe it ain't real smart, but that's the gamble you get for the favors you got.

Certain conditions are required. It's almost impossible to hit a driver off a patchy fairway and get a good trajectory on the ball. It takes a spongy turf to let the clubface get down into the ball.

An uphill lie is favorable because it gives the ball a natural lift. A breeze into your face helps, too.

A FAIRWAY drive invariably fades or slices. Don't count on a hook or a saight ball. Make allowances for the shot to slide to thr right.

A tall player like Johnny Miller can hit a driver from the fairway easier than a stumpy hombre like myself. His arc is more upright. A little man with a flat swing is begging for bankruptcy when he pulls a driver from his bag on the fairway.

It's a percentage shot. I only recommend a fairway driver under ideal conditions. And if you're trying to save the family farm.

JACOBS, BOTTS

Hart, 7-5, with birdies on the first, third, fourth, seventh, eighth and 10th holes. He finished 5-under due to a bogey on the tough par-3 ninth.

"I'm getting sharper each day," said the winner of three PGA tour titles. "I felt so strong, so pumped up out there today that I had to pull back a couple of times."

In six matches Jacobs is 16-under-par. He has notched 23 birdies and six bogies. One year ago, when he was 27-under through the final match, he had birdied every hole on the course. So far this year he has missed the second, sixth, 13th, 15th, and 18th. He has not had to play the 18th and has gone to No. 15 only three times.

Against Hart, who had eliminated Terry Ferraro, 3-2, Jacobs rolled in birdies of 16, 14, 10, 2 and 4 feet and another of six inches when an eagle putt lipped out.

He is using a heavy-bladed putter which he has not used since last year's tournament here. The greens are such, says Tommy, that he needs more weight to lag better.

Botts played his best golf of the tournament Saturday in ousting Eddie Merrins, 5-4, and Gerry Preuss, 3-1. He was 2-under in both matches.

His slow play unnerved Preuss, who lingers over a shot like a hungry cat over a saucer of milk. Preuss, leading 1 up after 11, gave away the 12th and 13th holes with poor long-iron shots and that gave Botts the impetus he needed.

The 36-year-old Los Angeles native added wins on the 14th and 15th holes with superb irons of his own, followed by short birdie putts of 3½ and 5 feet.

Preuss canned a 4-foot bird on the 16th to prolong the match, but he topped his second shot out of the rough on the 17th and Botts went on to almost eagle the par-5 hole when his chip caught a piece of the hole and wound up a few inches away.

"Jerry likes to play fast and I suppose my slow play bothered him," Botts said without undue concern. "I was never really worried even when he had me down. He is not a strong long-iron player and I knew he was fighting that part of his game."

Preuss, a former USC golf captain, was not sharp all day. He shot 78 in the morning but outlasted Wally Bradley when the latter dunked his shot in the creek on the 18th hole and took a double bogey.

Botts, who is 6-foot-3, 210, was one down to Merrins after four holes but won the fifth, sixth and eighth with pars. He birdied the 10th and 13th to finish off the little Bel Air pro.

"I feel the best two players are in the finals," said Botts. "Tommy and I have a lot of experience, even though this is my first time in this tournament."

Botts has struggled unsuccessfully on the PGA tour for six years. He quit temporarily this year and earned $15,000 in the WTGA spring series. He plans to return to the big time soon.

But right now his primary concern is Jacobs. How confident is he?

"I'm going home now to write my victory speech," he explained.

Fifth round: Tommy Jacobs (even par) def. Dennie Meyer (2-over) 2-1; Dave Hart (2-over) def. Terry Ferraro (5-over) 3-2; Gerry Preuss (7-over) def. Wally Bradley (8-over) 19th hole; Rafe Botts (2-under) def. Eddie Merrins (3-over) 5-4.

Sixth round: Jacobs (5-under) def. Hart (3-over) 3-5; Botts (2-under) def. Preuss (3-over) 3-1.

Today's pairings: championship, 9:30 a.m., Jacobs vs. Botts; third place, 9:36, Hart vs. Preuss; fifth place, 9:42 and 9:48, Meyer vs. Ferraro and Bradley vs. Merrins.

DeJesus American lightweight champ

NEW YORK (UPI) — Busy, bustling Esteban DeJesus scored a unanimous 12-round decision over Ray Lampkin at Madison Square Garden's Felt Forum Saturday to become the first American lightweight champion and put himself in line for a world title match.

DeJesus, ranked No. 1 by Ring magazine and third by the WBA and WBC, will probably meet Scotland's Ken Buchanan, ranked one place behind him in the Ring magazine list, for the New York state athletic commission division of the title. Earlier, the commission stripped Roberto Duran of Panama of the WBA version of the title for his failure to defend against Buchanan.

Debby third in Junior World golf

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — Suzanne Cadden of Scotland came from behind and Randy Barenaba of Hawaii held his lead to win the girls' and boys' 15-17 titles in the sixth annual Junior World Golf Tourney Saturday.

Miss Cadden, 15, of Dunbartonshire, shot a 4-over-par 79 on the 6,238-yard Torrey Pines North course for a 72-hole 326. Alice Miller, Marysville, Calif. had a final 82 for 327 and second place.

Miss Cadden shot a 78 Friday despite a two-stroke penalty to move to 247, well behind the third-round leaders.

Barenaba, of Lale, finished with a 2-over-par 74 for a 290 total on the 6,727-yard Torrey Pines South course.

Jack Renner, defending champion from San Diego, was in second with a final 75 for 293.

Scott Simpson, San Diego, shot a final round 73 for 294 and third place.

Other top finishers were Joe Flood, La Jolla, Calif. Fourth, 295; David Lennie Clements, Poway, Calif. seventh, 299, and Dale Walker, San Diego, eighth, 299.

In the girls' final, Debby Steward of Long Beach, who had been tied with Miss Miller for second at 245 after three rounds, carded an 83 for 328 and third place.

Brenda Rego, Kunia, Hawaii, the leader at 243 after three rounds, dropped to fourth with a final 85 for 328. Julie Stanger of Phoenix, Ariz. was fifth with a final 81 and 329.

ASTROS — Placed Larry Dierker, out since June 21 with an injured shoulder, back on the active list and sent relief pitcher Jim York to Denver of the American Assn.

Haynie holds one-shot lead

HORSHAM, Pa. (AP) Sandra Haynie wasn't happy with her game despite a one-under-par 72 Saturday that enabled her to maintain a one-stroke lead after 36 holes of the $30,000 George Washington Golf Classic.

"I don't feel I've played well either day," said the 30-year-old Miss Haynie after shooting 37-35 over the par 36-37 Hidden Springs Country Club golf course. She had a three-under-par 70 in Friday's first-round of the Ladies Professional Golf Assn. event on the 6,150-yard layout.

Miss Haynie, who finished second three successive times before taking last week off, said she thought she had something going when she rolled in three consecutive birdie putts on the 12th through the 14 holes. But after playing the next three in par, she bogeyed the 18th when she drove the rough and hit her second shot in a bunker.

Miss Haynie has a two-round total of 142, one stroke ahead of Debbie Austin of Oneida, N.Y., who is looking for her first victory in six years on the tour. Miss Austin, who carded a two-under 71 in Friday's first round, added a 72 Saturday with the help of an eagle on the par-five seventh hole.

Laura Baugh of Long Beach struggled home in 76 for a 155 total — 13 shots behind the leader.

Carole Jo Skala, a 35-year-old in her fourth year on the tour, fired the best round of the day, a five-under par 68, to tie for third with Susie Roberts, Mary Mills and defending champion Judy Ahern.

Diane Patterson, of Longview, Calif., scored a four under par 69, but had to settle for a 71 when she was penalized two strokes for reporting late to the first tee. Miss Patterson had a 36-hole total of 149.

Stopa captures U.S. Publinks

FLANDERS, N.J. (UPI) — Stan Stopa, a long hitter from New Orleans who has played the steadiest golf the last two days, rallied from five strokes back with a final round 37-35—72 to capture the 48th U.S. Public Links championship Saturday at the Flanders Valley Golf Course.

Phil Reichel, who started the day with a four-stroke lead, found trouble in the woods and turned in a 78 to finish one stroke back. He was tied with Gary Hitch of Santa Barbara, who was just one stroke off the pace going into the final round.

HAPPY HARRY JENSEN, a visitor from Las Vegas, holds his 14-pound bluefin tuna that he caught on the Victory, skippered by Joe Phillips (right) out of Pierpoint Landing.

DONNELL CULPEPPER

Pierpoint vessel gets tuna trophy

Harry Jensen, a visitor from Las Vegas who wanted to try his luck for fish in the ocean, caught the first bluefin tuna that has been decked on any Long Beach sportfishing boat in this local area this year. Even though the fish, caught on Pierpoint Landing's half-day boat, Victory, with Joe Phillips as skipper, weighed just 14 pounds, it won a trophy for the landing.

Phillips had taken his passengers to the Horseshoe Kelp in mid-San Pedro Channel on the morning run. He was almost ready to pull the anchor and head for the landing when the school of bluefin started breaking.

Jensen's fish was the first one caught. Four others were caught before the school vanished. The heaviest for that Thursday morning run weighed 18 pounds and was caught by James Meyer, of Lakewood.

Those two fishermen and others aboard the Victory had full limits of kelp bass when they returned to Pierpoint shortly after noon.

Years ago the Ambassadors of the Port of Long Beach ordered two trophies when the old Pierpoint and Pacific Sportfishing were bitter rivals. One trophy was for albacore; the other for the first bluefin tuna. There always was intense rivalry to capture the trophies.

Since that time, Pierpoint Landing has been reduced and moved, and Pacific Sportfishing is no more. Yet, the trophies still are there for prospective competitors.

IT'S GRUNION TIME AGAIN. The tiny silversides are scheduled to begin a four-day spawning show Tuesday night. This run marks the third one of the summer season, and there will be just one more which starts on July 31. This is not to say that grunion won't have other runs at later dates, but the season for plucking them off the beaches will be over. The Department of Fish and Game has to keep certain months closed so that the grunion won't become an endangered species.

The runs, always listed for two hours, but sometimes shorter or longer than that, go this way, starting Tuesday night: 10:50 p.m. to 12:50 a.m.; Wednesday, 11:25 p.m. to 1:25 a.m.; Thursday, 12:06 a.m. to 2:06 a.m.; Friday, 12:58 a.m. to 2:58 a.m. Actually those a.m. figures are for each following day, but we try to give you the dark hours without mixing you up on the schedule.

On that final run of the year, the starting times will go like this: July 31, 11:09 p.m.; Aug. 1, 11:54 p.m.; Aug. 2, 12:45 a.m.; and Aug. 3, 1:49 a.m.

Anybody of any age can "hunt" grunion and then try to catch them with bare hands, but if you are 16 years of age or older, you need a valid ocean fishing license. You must not use seines, dip nets, buckets or any similar equipment to catch the grunion.

There is no way of determining what beaches the grunion will choose although the silversides have shown a liking for Belmont Shore and Seal Beach areas in earlier runs this year.

THE BISHOP COUNTRY AND AREA around that city and beyond are having one of the greatest summers in recent history, fish-wise and weather-wise, but in standpoint of patrons, the story isn't so good. There have been some rather unfortunate reports about gasoline shortages, high prices for such fuel and other remarks on Southern California radio and television stations that are causing people to postpone or cancel fishing and sight-seeing trips into the Sierra Nevada.

The silly report that gasoline is selling for more than a dollar per gallon at Bishop and along Highway 395 toward Reno and at other points of state routes is absolutely false.

You may find gasoline prices a few cents more up that way than you would in Long Beach, but that has always been the case. One must consider the distance that tanker trucks must be driven to supply all gasoline stations.

Some of the resorts beyond Bishop are really hurting because business has fallen off considerably this season. Yet, the Department of Fish and Game is making heavy plants of rainbow trout in all streams and lakes.

Denton Sonke, manager of the Bishop Chamber of Commerce, says:

"We have plenty of gasoline and and the prices are the same as they have been in the past. We have no shortages whatsoever. Everything is near normal. What we are really having up here is a 'people shortage,' not a gas shortage."

Hiking 'under control'

By RAY GISE

It may come as a shock to those who like to hike and backpack into wilderness areas, but controls are now in effect. It is enough to make one go down to the nearest shopping center and say, "This is it, I'll backpack here." Drastic daily limits are a way of life for backpackers for many Eastern Sierra areas.

"Due to overuse in some areas and increasing pressures in others, we are adopting limited use measures to prevent further degradation of our back country," said Henry Schmidt, superintendent of Sequoia-Kings Canyon National Park.

Effective now and ending Sept. 3, daily entry limits are in effect for the following trailheads: Taboose Pass, 25 persons per day; Sawmill Pass, 25; Onion Valley-Kearsarge Pass, 60; North Lake-Bishop Creek-Paiute Pass, 25; and South Lakes-Bishop Creek-Bishop Pass, 50. Wilderness permits are required to enter the back country. They are issued on a first come, first served basis. This applies to backpackers only.

Three locations in this area where permits may be obtained are Mt. Whitney Ranger District, Lone Pine; National Park Service Trailer at Onion Valley; and White Mountain Ranger District located 10 miles west of Bishop on Highway 168. Hours for the latter will be 6 a.m. to 10 p.m. daily except for 24 hours a day on Fridays. Limited parking will be available on the site.

To one who has backpacked almost half a century, this is almost incredible. I feel just like the mountain men" and "buffalo hunters" of old who could not believe what had happened to the freedom they had enjoyed. Suddenly the wilderness areas I know and have enjoyed have become too complicated. There has been just too much traffic. Frankly, I do not know how these edicts will be enforced, but if you go on your own without proper procedure you could be in trouble.

I do not condemn any one who would like to enjoy the "freedom of the hills." This is our land and heritage and the privilege is ours to enjoy, too many have used this privilege to the detriment of the ones who really enjoy it.

I have seen far too many "would be" backpackers desecrate the back country, and this includes some scout groups and their leaders. It wasn't the scouts — it was the leaders — who tossed all the lunch trash into a high mountain lake. I took issue with the leader of this group. His reply was: "What the hell, we are never coming back here again." My reply was: "I hope you don't." This was a few years ago. Over the years since, tons of trash were hauled out of this one area.

WHY HAS backpacking suddenly become the "In Thing"? I don't know the answer but I do know many "would be" backpackers are out of their element. Some of them should take up projects in the flat lands. The back country has become a jungle like some of our city streets at nite. There was a time when on a long trek you could have several food caches spotted (in small trees where bears could not climb) and your food would be there when you arrived. No one would touch it except a bear if he could get to it. This is not so today. It is an even chance your cache will be gone; your camp, if you leave it, will be gone, and your car may be gone when you come out at the roadhead.

Goddess wins rich Lassie

Badly disappointed a week ago when Susan's Girl failed for the fifth time to win at Hollywood Park, Florida's Fred W. Hooper was all smiles at the Inglewood track Saturday.

His homebred Special Goddess, with Laffit Pincay at the controls, streaked to a one-length victory in the $101,875 Hollywood Lassie Stakes and beside providing Hooper with a check for $53,125 she earned the meeting's two-year-old filly championship.

Away alertly, Special Goddess moved up along the inside going to the far turn, drew out to a length advantage turning into the stretch and maintained that edge to the wire. Second in the field of 13 was Calaki, the 8-5 favorite who had won her only two prior starts. She was three parts of a length in front of Fleet Peach.

Special Goddess raced as an entry with Special Team and they went postward at 3-1 as the third choices of a crowd of 36,417. The Hooper entry returned $8.60, $3.40 and $2.80, Calaki paid $3 and 2.60 and Fleet Peach paid $5 to show. Time for the six furlongs was 1:09 3/5, just two fifths of a second off the stakes record.

"I got the right one," beamed Pincay after dismounting, but Alvaro Pineda, who had his choice of fillies and finished sixth with Special Team, didn't agree 100 per cent.

"I had to go on with her going into the far turn or get shut off," Pineda said. "But she was plenty of filly and was strong enough to keep going. She never stopped."

The official charts show Special Team beaten less than three lengths, and trainer John Russell concurred with Pineda that "Special Team probably had enough trouble to cost her the race. She got off bad and then got stopped when making her move," said the smiling Englishman who has saddled 21 winners for Hooper this meeting.

Special Goddess' paycheck increased Hooper's earnings for the meeting to $369,955, which puts him well in front of all other owners in that category.

Steve Valdez, who rode Calaki, reported his filly had no excuses. "The trainer (Bob Wheller) told me to go on with her if she broke on top and when she did just that, I wasn't about to take her back.

Calaki and Grateful Honey raced head-and-head for the first quarter mile, with Special Goddess third along the rail, about a half-length behind the leaders.

Special Goddess moved up to join them going into the turn and coming out of the bend Fleet Peach ranged up to become a contender. However, she failed to sustain her bid through the lane.

Another divisional titlist will be crowned at Hollypark today when the $150,000 Hollywood Derby is contested over a mile and one-half on the lakeside turf course.

Groshawk and Big Whippendeal, a pair of colts trained by Charlie Whittingham, and Easterners London Company and Amen II are the most fancied entrants in a field that also includes Twice A Prince, Card Table, Kirrary, Carry The Banner, Spacehei, Right Honorable and Sweet Medic.

Hollywood Derby looks wide open

By HANK HOLLINGWORTH
Staff Writer

With no Secretariat around, today's 33rd renewal of the $150,000 Invitational Hollywood Derby is the most wide open in history and, additionally, in many respects it will be the start of something radically new.

1. Never before has the Derby been run on a Sunday.

2. Never before have the Derby 3-year-olds gone a mile and one-half, the distance previously always having been a mile and one-quarter.

3. Never before has the chase been contested on the grass.

In a race that was won a year ago by Riva Ridge and before that by such greats as Round Table and Swaps, the 1973 Derby has no standout.

Today's slim favoritism probably will be divided between Groshawk, who disappointed in his last race, but had the excuse of a slight cough, and Big Whippendeal, both of whom are trained by Charlie Whittingham, who has yet to saddle a Derby winner. Groshawk will be piloted by Bill Shoemaker, with Laffit Pincay aboard Big Whippendeal, giving Whittingham an edge in the riding department if nothing else.

Of the 11 three-year-olds scheduled to contest the Derby today are three Eastern invaders and a filly, Card Table.

One of the Easterners is French-bred Amen 2nd, surprise winner of the recent Cinema Handicap, which failed to establish a Derby favorite. Kirrary and Right Honorable finished in a photo behind Amen in the Cinema and will test the Frenchman again today.

Another invader is Twice A Prince, who was second to Secretariat in the Belmont Stakes. The third is London Company, an impressive stakes winner this year.

Groshawk, California's top 2-year-old in 1972, was the Cinema favorite as he went into the race fresh from three consecutive strong Hollywood Park efforts. But he never threatened in the Cinema, tiring and eventually finishing 10th.

Big Whippendeal is considered by many to be the "now" horse for the Derby. He earned his Derby invitation with a 1:48- 2/5 clocking in an allowance race the day after the Cinema.

Kirrary, Card Table and Right Honorable finished inches apart back of Amen in the Cinema and any or all could be "right there" in the Derby.

Twice A Prince arrived at Hollypark a few days ago, from Chicago where he was unplaced last weekend in the rich American Derby. Trainer John Campo, who saddled Jim French for a second-place finish in the 1971 Hollywood Derby, tabbed apprentice Steve Valdez as Twice A Prince's jockey.

London Company reeled off three consecutive stakes victories along the Eastern seaboard before shipping west for the Cinema in which he finished ninth. However, he has trained well since then and will be piloted by the meeting's No. 1 stakes chauffeur, Don Pierce. The latter has been victorious in nine added-money events this meeting and second in seven others.

Today's race may lack class personnel, but it figures to be interesting.

Lover John wins $87,250

CHICAGO (UPI) — Lover John made up five lengths under a whipping ride by jockey Bobby Ussery in the stretch on a sloppy track Saturday to handily win the richest race of the Illinois season, the $177,450 Arlington-Washington Park Futurity at Arlington Park.

It was the third stakes victory for Lover John, who earlier captured the Dover at Delaware and the Dragoon at Liberty Bell.

Until Ussery turned Lover John loose and went to the whip with his left hand at the head of the stretch, the race appeared to be between two 8-1 shots, Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Bensinger's Hula Chief and Joseph Dorgnac's Beau Groton, who were heads apart moving into the stretch after Hula Chief set the pace from the wire.

But Lover John, winning for the fourth time in 10 starts as a 2-year-old, justified the opinion of the crowd of 23,741, who sent him to the post as the even money favorite in the field of nine representing seven betting interests.

Lover John's margin was 2½ lengths and the top prize of $87,250 boosted his earnings for the year to $137,171. Beau Groton edged Hula Chief for second by a head for place money of $32,490, boosting his earnings to $55,950, and Hula Chief earned $16,245 for total earnings of $22,305.

Lover John paid $4.20, $3.20 and $2.60, Beau Groton returned $6.80 and $4.40 and Hula Chief paid $4.20.

MONMOUTH—Oxford Stable's WEST COAST SCOUT ($12.60) took the lead at the top of the stretch and went on to a 4½-length victory in the $100,000-added Haskell Handicap for three-year-olds and up. The five-year-old winner covered the mile and ⅛ in 2:01 1/5 with favored TENTAM second and WINDTEX third in the field of 11. LARRY ADAMS rode the victor.

YONKERS—Canadian-owned SMOG ($12.60) rushed up on the rail in the closing strides to win the $100,100 Cane Purse. Driven by VERNON DANCER, the winner raced the mile in 1:58 3/5 to defeat ARMBRO NESBIT and VALIANT BRET.

AQUEDUCT — Greentree Stable's STOP THE MUSIC ($3.80) sat second until the mile pole, then assumed the lead and went on to win the $75,000-added Dwyer Handicap for three-year-olds by three lengths. Ridden by HELIDORO GUSTINES, the winner ran the mile and ¼ in 2:02 3/5, with ARBEES BOY second and 44-1 shot DUC DEFLANAGAN third.

LIBERTY BELL — Second choice WINGED WISHES ($6.60) scored a neck victory over HONKY STAR in the $28,350 Schuylkill Stakes for 2-year-olds. Ridden by DON BROMFIELD, the victor ran 5½ furlongs in 1:05 4/5, with favorite BUNDLER third.

ROCKINGHAM—Favored BOOTLEGGER'S PET ($5) picked up the lead at the top of the stretch and went on to win the featured $10,000 Gen. Green Handicap by a head over FUN TO DANCE and SWIFTY-CHOP. TOMMY SISUM rode the winner to a 1:10 clocking for six furlongs.

DELAWARE—Apprentice ROCCO MARTIN rode TRADER ED ($15.80) to a two-length triumph in the featured One Count Purse for three-year-olds. The winner raced the mile and 1 1/16 in 1:44 3/56 on the grass, with MENDELSON third.

Bing just does what he likes

By MARY CAMPBELL

NEW YORK — The sympathetic, musical lilt that was in Bing Crosby's voice in "Goin' My Way" is still there. His eyes are bright, clear blue; his face has the light tan and scattered freckles of a Tom Sawyer; his manner is relaxed, unrushed and gracious; his attire the plaid jacket and mustard slacks consistent with the long-time casual image.

So. Crosby is easygoing and mellow now, at 69. But what about those busy days of movies and radio shows, was he casual then, or was he really working hard and driving?

"Drive? No, oh no. I shrink from that.

"I never worked hard at anything. You know, you get a song you like doing. There's a scene in a movies, with a beautiful playback, and all you have to do is mouth the playback."

Crosby lives now in Hillsborough, a 25-minute drive from San Francisco, with his wife, Kathryn Grant, and their three children.

"I play a lot of golf when I'm home, go into the city a lot for lunch. We go to the opera when it's on or to a good concert. There's a big jazz festival we've attended a few times. We keep very regular hours, 10 o'clock to bed and up at 7 a.m. We eat all our meals together, the whole family.

"THE CHILDREN are very interesting right now, 11, 13 and 14. I try to see their problems before they get too important. You have to try and inculcate good principles and spend as much time with them as you can.

"I travel a lot, hunt and fish, Europe every year, Africa, Mexico, Canada and Argentina. We take the kids whenever we can. Kathryn has a teacher's certificate so she can keep them up with school. But now that they're getting older, the school board frowns on that so we couldn't take them to Mexico this year, for instance.

"Sometimes we go to the movies, if we can find something to take the kids to. I know they had to bend the moral code on movies a little, but not as far as they've gone.

"At home, we have 16-millimeter. I can screen anything in 16. I have all my old ones. The kids run them.

Crosby says he reminisces about the old days whenever he meets somebody from that time. Bob Hope works so much nowadays that most of their frequent chats are on the phone.

"THE ROAD pictures were fun to do, you bet. You could do what you wanted to do and say anything, as long as somewhere or other you got some of the story in. We had a gag man on those pictures. He'd give Hope a line and me a line, but I'd have no idea what he gave Hope. I'd say my line and Hope would say, 'Let's do that over,' and he'd think of one and we'd have two good lines. They'd have the camera going pretty near all the time, even at rehearsal. Something would be funny; they'd leave it in.

"My first 25 years in show business I just was having a good time. I loved what I was doing with good actors and musicians. It never seemed like I had any goal or anything. Later on, I tried to get into some good things. I tried to diversify and play different characters.

"Some were nice little musicals. Your favorites are things that you might have been good in or accepted as good in, like 'The Country Girl,' 'High Society,' 'White Christmas,' 'Holiday Inn.'"

These days, Crosby does mostly TV appearances, "just enough to keep my hand in. Our family Christmas show is shot already. I'll do a comedy special with Bob Hope and Carol Burnett, probably shooting this summer, and one other that hasn't been picked yet. Then I'll be a guest for Flip Wilson and Carol and Hope. That is enough. I can leave the house at 8 — we're six minutes from the airport — and be on the set at 9:30 in the morning in Los Angeles.

"LAST YEAR our family Christmas show was No. 4 in the TV ratings for the year." Then comes the smile that signals joking rivalry. "Hope was third. That rankled."

Crosby isn't really retired from movies. He wouldn't have minded doing the part that Gene Kelly got in "Forty Carats" or "The Sunshine Boys" with Hope, but playwright Neil Simon thought them not Jewish enough.

"People used to send me some outrageous things I wouldn't be any good in and didn't want to do. They'd have a story meeting and they'd think of off-casting and say, 'Why not try Crosby?'.

"But if something came along they wanted me for, with reasonably clean material, I'd be easy to deal with."

Crosby released a record last spring with Count Basie, which may be his last. His records have sold 300 million, with "White Christmas" the biggest seller. Crosby was in New York "to try to drum up a little interest in the New York Experience," a multimedia move, set for fall opening, made by Electrovision Productions, a firm Crosby has money in.

Upcoming on Crosby's travel schedule are going to Alaska in Ausust to fish for salmon, sea trout and steelhead for the TV series, "The American Sportsman." "In September I go to Scotland; I put up a cup at St. Andrews seniors tournament and play there. I'll see the Ryder Cup Matches near St. Andrews. Then I'm going to Africa on safari and to Spain for partridge shooting."

Music hath charms with Rio shoeshine

RIO DE JANEIRO (UPI) — Ariel Ferreira da Silva whistles while he works — so tunefully that he gets paid three times the normal rate in his trade.

Ariel, 27, is a shoeshine boy on Avenida Atlantica along Copacabana Beach, one of dozens who work on the sidewalks in front of the high rise apartments and luxury hotels.

To many tourists and residents, the persistent shoeshine boys, some of whom carry white pitch to smear the boots of passersby, are an annoying aspect of the constant parade of beggars, peddlers and strolling musicians along Copacabana.

But customers come to Ariel.

Music is what keeps them coming to his regular stations at the sidewalk cafes of two luxury hotels, the California and the Luxor.

"Brazil Shoeshine Show," reads the sign on his big equipment box. "Shine with show 65 cents (4 cruzeiros). Without show 50 cents (3 cruzeiros)."

One recent rainy night, Ariel arrived at the second of his two hotels at 10 p.m. A businessman and his wife from the interior of Brazil were waiting for him. As Ariel pulled out his tools, he started to whistle.

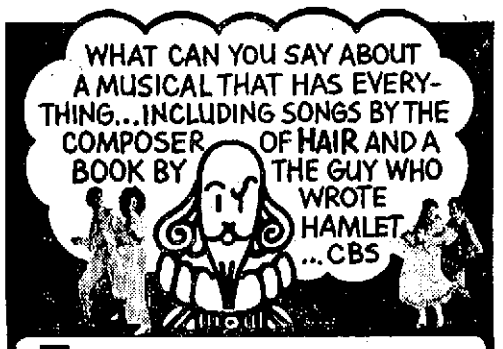

For each part of the operation, he had a different type of tune. He laid on the wax to a slow and sensual ballad. As he rubbed it in, he sang a comic song, moving the young wife to delighted laughter. Then came a cheerful whistling of "Oh, Susannah."

Pausing briefly to pull up a chair for the 9-year-old son of the couple, who was leaning fascinated on his mother's shoulder, Ariel drew out his buffing cloth. He snapped the cloth over the shoes to the throbbing rhythm of the samba bands that lead parades during Carnival.

Ariel has been shining shoes for 20 years, ever since he quit school, and he added music to his job 15 years ago. From his customers, he's learned a fair amount of English, and smatterings of other languages.

Joanna Cassidy: this year's 'new Monroe'

HOLLYWOOD—There's always a "new Marilyn Monroe" here and this year's is Joanna Cassidy, 27, a 5-foot-8½ red-head, a convert to Judaism, mother of two but "separated," who says, "I have something that other girls don't have that makes me sexy—my children."

"Nor," says Joanna, whose home towns include Haddonfield, N.J., Philadelphia, Syracuse, Columbia, S.C., and San Francisco, "do I see anything wrong with being in love with two men at the same time."

Just an all-American girl ... that Joanna ... making her movie debut in MGM's "The Outfit" and admitting that "being a big girl is a problem. I can't very well have Joel Grey or Dustin Hoffman as my leading man, for example."

JOANNA'S impulsive. Deciding while attending Syracuse that she wanted to convert to Judaism she sought several rabbis before she could get one to believe she was willing to do the studying necessary.

As she sat in the college restaurant one day, a student came over.

"He was in his whites" —a med student—" and said 'I've been wanting to meet you for days.' " She was cordial but told him she was dating another student.

"A few nights later, I ran away from my date, had this med student paged, and said, 'Here I am, doctor, I'm all yours.' "

Joanna and Dr. Ken Kobrin went to Columbia, S.C., where he was in the Army, then on to San Francisco where as Joanne Kobrin she did TV and modeling.

"It was time to move on to other things—it was time to end it," she says. Breaking up the marriage, she took her children to Hollywood and got discovered by talent director Joyce Selznic.

AND NOW they're saying her few scenes with Robert Ryan and Robert Duvall are Marilyn Monroeish.

"I don't want to confine myself to one man at this point in my life," Joanna told me with great frankness. "It's too selfish of me to give all of myself only to one. I am still in love with my first boy friend, Norman Gates. He's a writer I was with from 15 until I was 17. I met him again seven years later and we fell in love again. I went back to my husband but I'll find him again!"

Joanna stands out above the other girls at parties, and above some of the men, too. She chooses her clothes with that in mind. Her friends say, "There's an undulating air about her." She says, "To me, there's nothing sexier than a woman all covered up in white." To her, sex is fabric, colors and touch. Not nudity.

In one scene in "The Outfit" she's in a negligee —"And again I'm in white. And no bed scenes, not once. I try to convey sex appeal the hard way —with my eyes."

She went back to her theme: "Women with children are sexier. They," Joanna Cassidy came right out and said, "have more experience."

TODAY'S BEST LAUGH: The Vatican library has a Bible two feet thick, and one an inch square. Guides tell gullible visitors, "The big Bible contains everything Eve said to Adam, the little one has everything Adam said to Eve."

WISH I'D SAID THAT: Comic Jackie Kannon dropped into Las Vegas for a few days en route to N.Y., and reports: "Las Vegas is a nice place to stop—if you know when to stop."

REMEMBERED QUOTE: "God was wise when He created man. He made four openings in the head for information to go in, and only one for it to come out."

EARL'S PEARLS: Cookbook author Leonard L. Levinson isn't enthusiastic about English cooking; "They have hundreds of different dishes—all of which taste the same."

Mack McGinnis says he heard this dialogue in a doctor's waiting room: "Is he a good doctor?" ..."Of course! Would I be going to him three times a week for fifteen years if he wasn't a good doctor?" That's earl, brother.

Joe — richest bird

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — Joe Weeks is the richest old bird in town. Joe is a 22-year-old cockatoo. The owner, Mrs. Margaret Weeks, died recently. Zoo officials who were appointed in her will to provide for the Australian parrot said the widow left several thousand dollars to pay for his care.

At Knott's

Vocalist Jimmie Rodgers, whose records have sold more than 30 million copies, opens a six-day engagement in the John Wayne Theatre, Knott's Berry Farm, Buena Park, today. He will appear at 6:30, 8:30, and 10:30 p.m. today and Friday and at 8 and 10:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday.

Fan protecting bronze horse

VENICE, Italy (AP) — A tiny fan now cools one of the famous bronze horses at St. Mark's Basilica. Art experts said industrial pollution iscorroding the four bronze horses. They mounted the fan, with a one-inch diameter blade, in an experiment to see if it would prevent acids from destroying the bronze.

Never too late for a bandstand

LONDONDERRY, N.H. (UPI) — Concerts at the bandstand on the village common were a center of summer social life in small towns around the nation at the turn of the century.

Londonderry missed out on some of the fun then because it didn't have a bandstand. But it's never too late, and a civic committee thinks 1973 is the right year to make up the deficiency.

The Londonderry Recreation Committee, chaired by mailman Charles Fowler, is working to get a bandstand built on the common in time for Old Home Day celebrations Aug. 18-19, and the end of year-long celebrations of the town's 250th anniversary.

The committee has an architect's model, donated free by a music-loving teacher of architecture at Massachusetts Institute of Technology and it has promises of labor from three construction firms.

THE TOWN has $1,000 left over from a $2,000 fund allocated for a three-day celebration to start the anniversary year in 1972.

"I'm the golden chiseler," said Anne Beebe, vice chairman of the committee, who scrounged up so much volunteer effort last year that there was money left over after the big shindig.

She gained experience in seeking funds during 10 years in San Francisco, where she was on the USO board.

She has won offers of help, supplies and the plans for the bandstand.

"I just went down to MIT and asked if maybe an architecture class couldn't design us a shell as a class project," she said.

"Jeffrey Gutcheon, who teaches architecture at MIT, telephoned me and said, 'Can't I do it? I happen to be a musician. I have some very definite ideas on what a shell should be.'"

GUTCHEON drove through a February blizzard to Londonderry, a sprawling and fast-growing rural township 10 miles from the Massachusetts state line, with a population of more than 5,000.

He looked over the common, with its war memorial and cannon, sited the bandstand in his mind, then on weekly train rides from his New York home to his Boston job, drew up the plans and built a scale model.

A simple but contemporary design, its front forming the long side of a triangle, the bandstand would be built of wood and painted to harmonize with the town hall and three churches surrounding the common.

TELEVISION LOG OF THE INDEPENDENT-PRESS-TELEGRAM AND THE EVENING NEWS

Alex Trebek is good bet to score as 'Odds' host

By BOB MARTIN
TV-Radio Editor

Attention, Mrs. Housewife: A tall, dark and handsome stranger is about to enter your home. He's a bachelor, to boot. Don't leave the front door unlocked — just close the drapes and turn on your television set.

The wavy-haired, mustachioed stranger is a newcomer to American television. His name is Alex Trebek, and he's the host of a new audience-participation game show, "Wizard of Odds," that will air each Monday through Friday morning on NBC (10 to 10:30, Channel 4), starting this week. That is, it will be telecast each morning unless the Watergate hearings happen to interfere. You never can tell about those Watergate hearings. (The show's premiere is set for Tuesday.)

ALEX TREBEK . . . Wizard of Odds

Trebek turns 33 this month, and you might ask: "Where has he been all my life?" Well, he has been on the other side of the border, because he happens to be a Canadian. He's a native of Sudbury, Ontario, a place you might not be too familiar with, even though "that's where 60 per cent of the world's nickel comes from." At least, that's what they taught him in school.

In a way, it's too bad he's not from Quebec. It rhymes much better with Trebek than Sudbury does.

Though new to American television, Alex has had more than a dozen years of experience on Canadian television. He started out doing radio and television announcing on a part-time basis while going to college in Ottawa, then moved to the Canadian Broadcasting Co. headquarters in Toronto in 1963, where for 10 years he appeared on a wide variety of TV programs. He has been a news announcer and disc jockey, and has hosted everything from high school quiz shows to various sports shows to man-on-the-street shows to one of Canada's top talk shows, "Afternoon," for several years.

Trebek has now come to California in search of greater fame and greater fortune in American television. He figures the odds are better in this country than Canada, and they don't call him the "Wizard of Odds" for nothing. "It's a matter of numbers," he told me at lunch the other day in the Smoke House in Burbank. "There are more viewers in the United States, so they can afford to pay more money here."

He will be more than satisfied if he makes as big a splash on American television as such other Canadian wetbacks as Raymond Burr, Lorne Greene, Leslie Nielsen and Monty Hall, to name just a few.

Trebek has "all the qualities necessary to make him a major TV star in this country." At least, that's the view of Lawrence R. White, vice president, programs, for NBC-TV, who calls the "Wizard of Odds" program "one of the most exciting daytime program projects we've seen in many years."

The modest Trebek isn't all that sure, himself, that he's going to make it big here. With only a 13-week contract sewed up, he hasn't seen fit to ship his collections of books and records and other possessions from Toronto to Southern California yet.

Although he has had neither training nor experience as a dramatic actor, the TV host admitted he would like to try a dramatic role. "I'm not sure I could act my way out of a paper bag, but I'd like to find out," he told me.

Alex didn't study to go into television or the theater. He majored in philosophy at the University of Ottawa, from which he received a BA degree in 1960. Maybe more performers should think about taking up philosophy. It helps to be philosophical when you're out of a job.

The "Wily Wizard," as he has been dubbed by NBC publicists, speaks both English and French and attended bilingual schools, but he was with the English language network in Canada. He is of Russian descent on

Variety shows run into ratings trouble

By RICK DU BROW
United Press International

There will be only one new weekly, prime-time variety series on the commercial television networks when the upcoming season begins.

And even that show, "NBC Follies," will have no regular star-host, another indication that network video is still having trouble getting and holding top headliners who can carry a series from week to week.

The number of regular variety series has shrunk considerably in recent times. The old-time big-name stars like Jack Benny and Bob Hope are getting older. The sought-after audience is younger than before. And the government cutback on network prime time seems to have brought about more emphasis on shows believed to have a more certain bread-and-butter appeal to viewers — action programs and straight comedies.

In short, the networks have drifted toward shows they apparently think will give maximum ratings protection to their reduced amount of prime time. And how ironic it is to think that the weekly variety show — once a programming staple that helped build audiences for the young video medium — now is represented in a

MARJOE in Nashville (7), 11:30 p.m. — Marjoe Gortner tours his old stamping ground revealing Tennessee's colorful capital city, its people, their music and their lifestyles. CHICAGO IN THE ROCKIES (7), 8:00 p.m.—The sprawling Caribou Ranch outside Nederland, Colo., at an altitude of 9,000 feet is the setting for the first TV special of one of the country's top groups—Chicago. # SPECIAL

COCKEYED COWBOYS OF CALICO COUNTY (9), 7:30 p.m.—KHJ's Million Dollar Movie offers a few moments of respite from the usual violence, crime and destruction. Dan Blocker, Mickey Rooney and Nanette Fabray appear in a story about a western town which is in danger of losing the only blacksmith when he sends for a mail-order bride who doesn't arrive. The townspeople plot to get him a wife so they won't lose him.

ABC NEWS—AT EASE (7), 11:30 p.m.—If the above movie succeeded in taking you out of reality Howard K. Smith and Harry Reasoner will try to bring you back with this news show on the capital. Washington D.C. can be one of the most difficult, confounding, frustrating and, occasionally, unintentionally laughable places in the world. This show hopes to capture all of these attributes.

Variety shows run into trouble

relatively minor way in the prime time viewing hours.

ONE THINKS of just some of the many personalities whose variety series once commanded wide popularity and viewer loyalty: Milton Berle. Jackie Gleason. Ed Sullivan. Dinah Shore. Jack Paar. Arthur Godfrey. Steve Allen. Gary Moore. Perry Como. The Smothers Brothers. Dan Rowan and Dick Martin with their "Laugh-In" series that added a new pacing dimension to the variety format. And, of course, Benny and Hope. And all the others.

Well, Carol Burnett will be back this fall with her CBS-TV variety series, and thus far she has shown a staying power that few stars in television can match. No one can doubt that she is one of the great headliners in the history of the medium. And, at least going into the new season, her series has a more definite sense of permanence and security than can be found in any other weekly network variety show.

NBC-TV, of course, has the Flip Wilson series, which has also been a popular success, but this coming season will — by the comedian's own choice — be his last on a weekly basis with this particular show, for he has opted for periodic specials instead after that.

CBS-TV also has the Sonny & Cher series, but it has been something less than a smashing ratings hit. And NBC-TV has the Dean Martin show, which was a solid entry for a long time, but has been running out of gas and is being brought back with an altered format and the new title "The Dean Martin Comedy Hour." It is also being given one of the worst program slots a network show can get — the tail end of theriday prime time schedule.

This past season, Julie Andrews, Bill Cosby and Bobby Darin became additions to the list of name stars whose variety series were canceled because of ratings. And this summer the comedy team of Jack Burns and Avery Schreiber is taking a crack at the hard-pressed weekly variety field, on ABC-TV, and singer Helen Reddy is doing the same on NBC-TV.

For the present, that just about wraps up network prime-time programming of variety series in terms of shows currently on the air and those planned for the immediate future. Spokesmen for "NBC Follies," by the way, say Mickey Rooney and Sammy Davis will be "virtually resident guest stars in the series' early weeks."

As for viewers, those who have been burning with the dream of getting rich by writing scripts would probably get much richer if they could come up with variety series formats that excite the networks and catch on with the public. Such shows are at a premium these days.

New military comedy series on the way

By JERRY BUCK
Associated Press Writer

Will the success of "M-A-S-H" and the end of an unpopular war in Vietnam spark a revival of the military service comedy on television?

The question was put to "M-A-S-H" coproducers Gene Reynolds and Larry Gelbart, who are following their hit with "Roll Out!" a new show for CBS about the Red Ball Express a World War II truck outfit. They promptly shot that theory full of holes with a surplus M1 rifle.

"It's just a coincidence," Reynolds insisted. "We'd long been interested in the Red Ball Express. We see in it another opportunity for absurd situations. Men under enormous stress strangely enough offer enormous comedic possibilities.

"It's a show that uses mostly black talent. So when we were kicking around what we were going to do for next year the Red Ball Express came up. We both kind of jumped at it."

Then, in mock confession, he said, "Actually, we had a lot of olive drab paint left over and we were casting about for a war. The War of 1812 also offered possibilities."

As far back as the classic "You'll Never Get Rich," the Sgt. Bilko show starring Phil Silvers, the military comedy has been a TV staple. Virtually every branch and possibility was explored, from "McHale's Navy" to the old cavalry of "F Troop" to prisoners of war in "Hogan's Heroes."

But with the Vietnam War the military comedy fell into disfavor. It took a new twist to get such a show back on, and "M-A-S-H" offered it.

Gelbart acknowledges a debt to the movie which spawned the TV series. "They showed us the way," he said, "Not using the war as a sound effect, a distant rumble of cannon, but to get an element of reality.

"That's what attracted us to it. We wanted to do a service comedy that wasn't simply Bilko '73. We show that people get hurt in war and in one show that they actually get killed."

Reynolds said, "I hope that we treat it as real and show the way that people actually behave so that it's more recognizable. We have a point of view, on our good days, of humanity vs. the folly of war."

The producers say most of the comedy in "Roll Out!" will arise from the differences between the two black leads. Sweet, played by Stu Gilliam, is a streetwise hustler. Hilly Hicks as Jed is the square country boy whose father told him to always obey orders.

" 'Roll Out!' is a broader comedy," Reynolds said. "It's more detached from World War II than 'M-A-S-H' is from the Korean War. 'M-A-S-H' has a more serious tone. 'Roll Out!' is a little less real and more romanticized because of the detachment time now lends to World War II."

Gelbert said, "We're here to entertain but these things do have laments of comment, whether you like it or not. It will reflect the segregated army of that time and there will be some ethnic humor."

ALEX TREBEK IS 'WIZARD'

his father's side and French and Indian descent on his mother's side.

ON "WIZARD OF ODDS," Trebek chooses people from the studio audience (NBC Studios, Burbank) at random and asks them questions that test their judgment of national odds, averages and possibilities. Questions and answers are prepared and verified by an independent research organization — so Trebek doesn't have to be a real wizard, after all. Prizes of cash or merchandise, including cars, TV sets and furniture, go to the winning contestants. One contestant who appears during a show is selected, via a spin of the "Wizard's Wheel of Fortune," to compete in a final "bonus round."

How do odds figure in the competition? Well, Trebek might ask a question like "How many times each day does the average American husband kiss his wife?" or "What are the odds that you will recover your lost wallet if it had more than $20 in it?"

"Or," explained Trebek, "I might bring up three women and tell them that one out of three women in America wears a slip. If one or more of the three women had on slips they'd each win a prize."

An NBC publicist dining with us pointed out that Alex is a low-key sort of guy and that "Wizard" has none of the wild, noisy antics associated with some game shows.

The TV host admitted, however, that he thinks women make better contestants than men because they show their emotions more. He has nothing against a pretty face, either. In fact, he referred to one contestant he'd chosen at a taping as "this, eat-your-heart-out, Alex Trebek, type."

"So what are the odds that you will get married in the next year or two?" I asked the personable bachelor.

"Slim," replied Alex, with almost no hesitation.

Of course, that's just his opinion. An independent research organization, knowing Southern California women better than the Canadian bachelor does, might come up with different odds.

The BIBLE Says

Question: Is there such a thing as sickness?

Christian Scientists and other "Science of the Mind" advocates believe and teach that there is no such thing as sickness, disease or pain. Mary Baker Eddy says the following in her Science & Health With Key to the Scriptures: "Matter and its effects, sin, sickness, and death, are states of mortal illusions" (285:8,9,11) "Man is never sick . . ." (393,29); "There is no disease . . ." (421:18).

The Bible, however, teaches differently! In Matt. 4:24 the Scripture says about Jesus, " . . . and they brought unto him all sick people that were taken with divers diseases and torments . . . and he healed them." Now, actually, what the Lord should have done was to just convince these people that they were not actually sick and tell them to go home! Notice: (1) The Bible says that they were sick. (2) The Bible says that Jesus healed them. Now, either He did or He did not. If He did not, the Bible is lying. If they were not actually sick, then they fooled the all-wise Son of God into thinking they were. The Bible speaks of many people who were sick (see also Mk. 6:5; John 4:46).

People today can do one of two things—they can believe the Bible, or they can be deceived by the pseudo-intellectualism of the science of the mind advocates of our day. Pity the person who is so deceived, and pity more the false teacher who deceived him who will receive the wrath of God!

Wells Report

Moonlight and Chardonnay

I can think of only two good reasons for any Southern California family to take a vacation during the month of July and go traipsing off somewhere else. 1. They are going to Tahiti. 2. They have relatives in Iowa who will come visit them if they don't strike first.

Otherwise there is really no reason to take a July vacation in Southern California or—if the office schedule insists you take it then—no reason to spend it anywhere else. The Southern California summer always seems to open officially on July 4 with the disappearance of night and morning low clouds, and summer is our best season.

There is so much to do after work and on weekends that who needs a vacation? There are beaches, golf courses, art shows, theaters, music festivals, and yesterday was the Annual Oregon-Washington State Picnic in Bixby Park. Who wants to go to Yakima or Grants Pass when Bixby Park is so much closer?

This is a great month in Southern California for outdoor theater, concerts and drama. On July 31, for instance, Elmer Bernstein will lead the Long Beach Symphony in a Starlight Serenade concert in Recreation Park.

We have three outdoor music theaters going full blast in the area, the Greek Theatre, the Hollywood Bowl and the new amphitheater at Universal Studios.

The Hollywood Bowl is the summer home of the L.A. Philharmonic, but I prefer Elmer Bernstein and his Starlight Serenade. It's not a matter of music, but a matter of proximity.

Half the fun—more than half—of a July outdoor concert is sitting out in the summer night, feeling the breeze on your face and hearing the murmurings of other people in the darkness. If it's music you want, better to go to the Music Center or another proper auditorium during the winter season, where the sound system always works the way it is supposed to work and where no airplanes compete with the string section.

But there is something about a flower-scented July night concert that is special and rewarding enough to endure the traffic snarls of the Hollywood Bowl and Greek Theatre. For one thing, if you showed up in January at the Music Center with a large Thermos of well-chilled pinot chardonnay or Pouilly-Fuisse, you'd be considered a little odd. However, at a summer concert there is nothing better to ease the frustration of airplane noises.

If you are bored with the Los Angeles amphitheaters, you can always drive to Redlands of a Tuesday or Friday evening, or to Hemet on Thursday. The Redlands Bowl is celebrating its 50th anniversary this season, and next Thursday night the Downey Symphony and the Aleta Davis Ballet are appearing in a free concert at the Ramona Bowl in Hemet.

And Wednesday through Saturday, the grand old musical Showboat is being presented at the Outdoor Theatre at San Diego State University. I mean, it gives you an excuse to go down there, and I never did feel easy carrying a jug of chilled chardonnay through San Diego Zoo.

The annual National Shakespeare Festival is also in full swing at the Old Globe Theatre in Balboa Park from Tuesday through Sunday. I think for King Lear though, I would forget the chardonnay and fill the jug with chilled chenin blanc or possibly a traminer. A little more body.

Of course, the event that will lure more people out into the night air this July than any other opened Friday in Laguna Beach. The Festival of the Masters pulls them in every year.

I've never quite figured out why: The idea of someone dressing up in costume, striking a pose and saying, "Hey, ma, I'm Judas at the Last Supper," has a certain boyish charm, I suppose, but the unposed tableaux on any residential street during trick-or-treat time at Halloween seem to me more spontaneous and just as artistic.

Perhaps it is just that I've never quite dared to take a Thermos of chardonnay to the Laguna Festival. Oh, I took a jug of gray reisling all the way to the Irvine Bowl once, but at the last moment I left it in the car. I have this fear of being rejected in Orange County.

Of course, you can always go to Tahiti. Bastille Day was Saturday, but in French Oceana they start celebrating sometime in June, and if you hurry, you can make it to Papeete before the celebration ends in August.

Take the Pouilly-Fuisse.

Classic Dining Room For Quiet Elegance

As in the Renaissance when simplicity supplanted the grandiose, so now there is a simmering down from the overdone. And this beautiful design, with its calm beauty and timeless taste, will be welcome news to those who applaud the return to quiet elegance.

Traditional with minimum adornment, its design is Classic. Its mood, gracious. Its look, quality. Rich warmth emanates from its veneer artistry of pecky pecans with ash solids . . . a handcrafted look from the depth of multi-surface mitered wood moldings . . . continuity from the classically beaded custom hardware. Pediment tops add authenticity; 17th Century Venetian bracket feet add weight to off-the-floor elegance, while 20th Century efficiencies are defined in scale and function. The finish is a warm tobacco brown, smartly distressed.

By HY GARDNER

Ryan O'Neal and Tatum . . . she gave up smoking

Tony Martin . . . four footprints on walk

Broderick Crawford . . . alive and well

Sarah Miles . . . candid about sex

Q: Have many comedy albums and single records been made on the Watergate theme? — Mrs. J. Anderson, San Antonio, Tex.

A: A flood of them. All giving the sharp needle to everyone within committee hearing distance. One of the first to wax enthusiastic was Mort Sahl, who spent a career rehearsing for just such a situation. His album is called Sing a Song of Watergate. Another, loosing a barrage of banter, takes potshots at the Republicans, Democrats and the press in a Capital album called The Watergate Comedy Hour — mostly devastating oneliners voiced by Fannie Flagg, Burns & Schreiber and Ann Elder, to name a handful. RCA's contribution is Son of Checkers, a not-so-subtle dig at Dick Nixon. The Waves got their feet wet in a Vibration Record titled At the Watergate (The Truth Comes Pourin' Out). Even Martha Mitchell becomes a fall gal — in David Allen Coe's How High's the Watergate, Martha? on the Plantation label. Anyway, it's comforting to know that, while America seems to have lost (or misplaced) its sense of honor, we still retain our sense of humor.

Q: I can't believe it — that Ryan O'Neal's nine-year-old daughter is a chain smoker. Is she? — Mrs. Renee B., Phoenix, Ariz.

A: Only in a scene she made for her dad's film, Paper Moon. "I hadn't smoked before," she said. "So I tried it twice before I did it for real for the cameras. I only smoked when the script called for it, and when it was over, I broke the habit!"

Q: Which actor's name appears the most on Hollywood's Walk of Fame? — Arthur A., Palm Springs, Cal.

A: Veteran singing charmer Tony Martin. He's the only star whose name is imprinted four times on the star-studded pavement. For achievements in four different mediums of entertainment — radio, movies, television and recordings.

Q: I understand that Sarah Miles recently revealed what her sex habits were. I'm curious. Could you enlighten me, please? — Mrs. Antone S., Seattle, Wash.

A: The 30-year-old Miss Miles minced no words when she told the Ladies Home Journal, "I thought making love was glorious from the moment I started quite young. If you are keen, you can spend an awful lot of time doing it. I still am keen, but I am not excessive the way I was when I was far younger." The candid actress also revealed she utilizes an unusual memory aid to remember to take the pill. "I have a broom handle by my bed," she said, "which actually hits me on the head when I get out of bed. With a reminder imprinted, "Don't forget to take your pill'!" She also admits to having had abortions and not regretting them.

Q: I thought that Broderick Crawford died of a heart attack some years ago. But my friend claims he's very much alive. Who's right — Mrs. Alloyne Cole, Oklahoma City.

A: Happily, your friend. Brod recently played the role of medical supervisor on the TV series The Interns.

Woman on patrol

The burly young husband was noisy, drunk and mad at both his wife and the two Lakewood deputy sheriffs who kept responding to complaints from irate neighbors. At the third call the two officers suggested to fellow Deputies Miles and Anderson that they try to settle this family disturbance. Deputy Miles accepted the challenge, marched up to the porch and rang the doorbell.

This time the husband had had enough of the sheriff's department. He threw open the door, glared down at 5 feet 4, 125 pound patrolwoman Jean Miles and roared, "You take off your shirt and I'll fight you."

The three male deputies doubled-up with laughter at this, but Deputy Miles stood her ground. She stared the man down and said, "I won't take off my shirt, but I'll fight you." She warned the chastened man he'd better not cause any more trouble. He didn't.

This was a routine incident to 30-year-old Jean Miles, but the idea of Deputy Miles — a woman in a patrol car — is not yet routine to everyone else. Deputy Miles is one of 20 women trained by the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department to participate in its experimental one-year program — "Ladies on Patrol" — which will determine whether women can make it in the traditionally male domain of patrol car duty.

In September of last year the sheriff's department assigned 12 of the "ladies" to six stations throughout Los Angeles County to work with male partners in two-person patrol car units. The other women serve as replacements and will probably be assigned to patrol work later if the program is successful.

Concerned, capable, attractive, "Lady on Patrol" Miles is determined to open doors for the approximately 400 women deputies on the L. A. County sheriff's department who — until now — have been excluded from certain types of assignments such as patrol work. Ms. Miles, who is divorced, originally joined the department in 1969 because she needed a steady well-paying job (she makes $1,170 a month now) to support her three children, but she found the criminal law classes at the sheriff's training academy fascinating and plans to stay on the department until retirement age. The Sybil Brand Institutue for Women was her first assignment, but after a year she went to the Firestone station where — in addition to her regular duties — she was required to ride eight hours a week as an observer in patrol cars.

This was no hardship to Deputy Miles. "I loved it so much that I rode every night after work. I even went on stake-outs and narcotics raids. I was eager to get into the meat of patrol work and when this program came up, I felt I was ready."

Although the women deputies on the department now receive the same 26 weeks of training at the sheriff's training academy as the men, the "Ladies on Patrol" were sent back to the academy for 80 hours of intensified training — including some specialized instruction in firearms and unarmed self-defense. The department felt the extra training was necessary due to the first-time-ever nature of the assignment and the fact some of the women came on the department four or five years ago when women were only given the academic part of the training course. At their assigned stations the new "patrolpersons" worked with special training officers for three to five months just as do the male trainees.

Equal (pay and training) but not unisex (minimum physical requirements for women are 5 feet 3 and 111 pounds) seems to be the goal of the sheriff's department. In fact, the department's publicity releases boast of its efforts to bring women into police work — first full-time woman deputy sheriff in 1912, eight per cent women in the department compared to a two per cent national average, 41 female sergeants and 11 female lieutenants. "Ladies on Patrol" appears to be yet another step toward evaluating women, "not on gender, but on their ability to fulfill the requirements of field policing."

However, in some ways the sheriff's department seems unduly concerned with the image of the "Ladies on Patrol" and anxious as to what kind of coverage the program has in the media. It is clear the department doesn't want any "editorializing" on the program at this point. And for all the stress on equality, the news releases on the program abound with descriptive phrases on the feminine qualities women will bring to police work — their "innate qualities of patience, tact, diplomacy and empathy," their ability by their mere presence to "diffuse a potentially violent situation," and their "calming effect on husband-wife disputes." What then does the sheriff's department expect of these "Ladies on Patrol" — are they breaking new ground for the benefit of the other women on the department or appeasing pressure groups? Are they "police persons" capable of handling any situation in the field or token officers limited to specialized feminine duties and to enhancing the department's reputation as innovative?

Deputy Miles and the five other "Ladies on Patrol" assigned to the Lakewood Sheriff's Station are expected to handle all patrol duties within reason says Lt. Herbert S. Beggs, in charge of scheduling and training at the station.

"They wouldn't be expected to jump in the middle of a barroom brawl, but then we don't expect one or two male officers to do that either. The departmental policy is that if you have something that is more than you can handle you request back-up and other units are as close as your radio."

Within reason covers a lot of things for Deputy Miles during any one of her grueling 10-hour late afternoon-early morning shifts. In her olive green skirt and jacket, white blouse, black heels and black shoulder bag with a built-in holster for her gun she looks ladylike and efficient as she attends the daily briefing, carries the heavy field box containing ammunition and other supplies to the car and deftly steers the patrol car through late afternoon traffic.

The sight of the petite blue-eyed blonde behind the wheel of a police car, however, blows the minds of two men who pull up beside Deputy Miles and her partner, 28-year-old John Anderson, and yell, "It's got to be more fun that way."

Although the patrol car is designated as a traffic car, the team of Miles and Anderson likes a lot of action and during one of the months they worked together they had 33 arrests and only 27 tickets. The reason? "We don't sit around in coffee shops drinking coffee. We keep our eyes open and see things."

Now they spot a young boy of about 15 signaling for them to stop.

"Take me to the station," he says dramatically. "I'm a runaway."

His bravado is as much for the benefit of two young girls standing nearby as it is for the deputies; he is indeed a runaway from a boys' camp. He turned himself in to make his girl "sorry."

"You cost the taxpayers money everytime you run away," Deputy Miles says with the air of a strict but concerned mother. "And you delayed us. We were going to the store for a cold drink."

The boy indicates a nearby store. "Were you going there?"

"No," answers Deputy Miles, and she is fishing now, "too much pot there."

Bragging, the boy describes how he sells "lids" at the store.

Although they are aware drugs are being sold at the store, the officers don't have any evidence yet. Casually, the woman deputy inquires, "Do you get your lids from a blue Chevy pick-up (a car they've noticed at the store frequently)?

"How do you know that?" blurts the boy disarmed by her attitude, and the officers add another piece of evidence to their collection.

By the time the paper work on the runaway is completed, it is dark outside. The dark apparently inspires the more serious type of crimes because their radio comes alive with a burglary-in-progress call. Deputy Miles maneuvers the speeding car with its flashing lights, blaring sirens, noisy radio through the traffic on Norwalk Boulevard to the scene of the suspected crime — a quiet house in a residential neighborhood. She pulls out the shotgun that is kept in the front of the car and stations herself by a window. Before long, three other units arrive and eight armed deputies now surround the house. The tension in the air is tangible — particularly when Deputy Anderson climbs in the window to see if anyone is inside.

It is a false alarm this time, but all deputies

She knows how to handle a gun

on the sheriff's department — male or female, patrol or desk — must qualify in marksmanship once a month to be prepared for the moment of truth when they have to defend a citizen, themselves or their partner with their guns. Deputy Miles would not hesitate to use her gun during that moment of truth and there is no squeamishness in the way she handles the shotgun.

How does Deputy Anderson feel about relying upon a female partner for back-up in an emergency?

"I have felt," Anderson claims, "very confident having Jean as back-up — as confident, in fact, as with anyone else. The idea that women need protection bugged me at first but I have learned that Jean can protect me, that I can send her off on her own and that I can leave her with four or five suspects while I check-out another."

The idea that a policeman must be powerful enough to overpower suspects physically is still firmly engrained in the minds of many people — particularly many of the old-line deputies, but Lt. Beggs says it is a rarity for deputies to have to deal physically with prisoners without assistance. The desk officers who screen calls generally and send more than one unit if it sounds like a serious situation.

Lt. Beggs, who would expect a male-female patrol team to handle any situation, believes that the decreasing importance of physical force in police work is one of the reasons for the gradual lowering of height requirements for males to 5 feet 8. Although the male half of the Miles-Anderson team is a husky 5 feet 11 and 180 pounds, he has relied more on psychology than on force in his five years on the department.

"The tongue is mightier than the sap," says Deputy Anderson. "I've only had to use force on one prisoner. I'd rather talk a prisoner to jail than fight him. Easier on uniforms too."

Ironically, many deputies report that force is more often necessary with women prisoners than with men and the most difficult arrest Deputies Miles and Anderson make on this shift is a female. The unit is dispatched to a residence where several runaways are supposedly being sheltered. Another unit arrives, the helicopter hovers overhead, but there is only one runaway — a defiant teenage girl with stringy long hair, faded blue jeans and a boy's shirt.

She glares insolently at the officers, reluctantly puts her hands behind her back for the handcuffs and squirms around a lot after being handcuffed. "Leave my ass alone," she snarls when Deputy Miles searches her.

"Watch your mouth, miss," warns the lady deputy, searching her quickly for contraband or weapons.

The presence of women deputies in the field has been an advantage with women prisoners. Male officers are not allowed to search women other than a quick waist pat search — and that means women might be able to dispose of contraband material or use a concealed weapon on the officers.

When Deputy Miles asks her name, the runaway says triumphantly, "You mean you ain't got no paper on me?"

"I asked your name, Miss," commands Deputy Miles icily.

The girl, less sure of herself, mumbles something.

Deputy Eiles looks the girl straight in the eye and orders, "Spell it." The girl does. In this same hard-guy manner Deputy Miles gets all the necessary information and the girl is taken to the station.

The long night wears on in a chaos of activities — ticketing a young man for not having a tail-light, warning a teen-ager to stop racing his car around residential neighborhoods, eating greasy food at a taco stand, rousting kids caught out after curfew and finding illegal drugs on four men stopped for some other offense. At midnight calls begin coming in from bars where boozed-up customers are causing problems. The deputies notice another unit in front of a bar and stop to give assistance. The officers have several drunks — who were fighting in the bar — in custody. Deputies Miles and Anderson take one of the prisoners — a Mexican youth of 18 — to the station.

Strangely enough, this Mexican male with his cultural heritage of male dominance and machismo does not seem embarrassed at being arrested by a woman. Perhaps it is because Deputy Miles speaks Spanish which makes her seem more like a friend than an oppressor to the lonely youth.

More a friend than an oppressor

Deputy Miles has another explanation, "Maybe it is bragging but I think it is how we as women have learned to handle people in the field. You can arrest someone and let them save a little face."

Anderson has a different explanation for the fact men don't seem to resent being taken to jail by a woman. "A guy doesn't want to have anything to do with fighting with a girl yet. It may change if there are more women on patrol and the men begin to see them as sheriff's deputies instead of women. Also," he adds, "I think men feel safer with women deputies because of the image that male policemen have of hitting people with clubs."

The young Mexican obviously does not worry about police brutality in this car. He slumps against Deputy Miles and begins to cry, "No tengo madre. No tengo padre. Soy solo." (I have no father or mother. I am alone.)

"No llores," (don't cry) comforts Deputy Miles and somehow they start singing La Cucaracha together. They are still singing, to the amusement of the men at the station, when the prisoner is taken in for booking.

Obviously Deputy Miles is at ease in patrol work — enough at ease to be herself and not attempt to fit into a stereotype — either the hard guy image some male officers try to live up to or the ladylike image the department is promoting for the "Ladies on Patrol." Her work in the field so far has impressed her immediate superiors at the Lakewood station.

"Deputy Miles," says Lt. Beggs, "is a very capable officer who writes good reports, makes good observations, is receptive to new thoughts and constructive criticism. I think overall she is a good officer who will be a credit to herself, the program and the department without any limitations."

Perhaps these patrolpersons may in the future work without any limitations but to date Deputy Miles and the other "Ladies" have experienced some limitations. How much these limitations have handicapped them in the field and kept them from being fairly evaluated cannot be known for sure.

For example, Deputy Anderson — who trained "Lady on Patrol" Barbara Birkeland — believes the training of the women deputies for patrol work was not totally similar to that of a man.

"They were shielded and covered and protected. They couldn't go to any 'hot' calls for a while. We never had a definition of a 'hot' call and to some that means a prowler. For a whole month that cuts down training. I think after four months none of them were as well trained as any man would be because of this protection."

Although there has been no difference in the treatment of the women deputies from December on, Deputy Anderson believes that this protection during their training kept it from being a really fair test then. In addition, the women started out having to carry their guns in their purses and that regulation is still in effect although some strap their holsters around their waists anyway.

These limitations appear to be caused by two factors — the department's concern about maintaining a favorable image for the program so the community will accept it and a genuine uncertainty — since this is new terrain — as to what women are capable of.

Another limitation faced by Deputy Miles is a psychological — but important one — the attitude of the male officers at the station. Although Deputy Anderson believes the men would lose their reservations about the program if they worked with the women, he also admits that after hours a common comment is, "Come September, let's get the women out of here."

Ironically, the success of Deputy Miles has not convinced the men the program can work. "Jean's an exceptional person," says one deputy. "She could do anything. Most women couldn't handle it."

The attitude of Deputy Warren Keller, training officer at the Lakewood station, is probably more typical. He likes the theory of the program but he personally wouldn't want to work with a woman.

"I wouldn't feel as comfortable with a female partner. If a man goofs or you want to tell him something, you can do it more directly. With a woman you can't be as direct and it creates more tension holding yourself in."

Deputy Miles is aware of the attitude of many of the men and feels a little like a token woman at present. "But," she adds, "I do feel that the 12 of us who are working in patrol cars are making a little dent for women in this department. At least we disproved the myth that we wouldn't last out in the field a day — which some men believed."

Because she is anxious to prove herself to herself, Deputy Miles desperately wants to be assigned to a one-person patrol car. Sheriff Peter Pitchess and the other officers at the downtown headquarters are reluctant to take this step. The official reason given by Sgt. Mary Ann Dugas, coordinator of the "Ladies on Patrol" program, is that the experimental program was designed only for a male-female team and the program is being evaluated on that basis. Undoubtedly, the sheriff — who must depend on voter support for re-election — worries about the possible reaction if a woman deputy were to be killed or injured while on patrol duty by herself. But Deputy Miles — who is still being evaluated by her male partners each month although technically out-of-training — considers herself in training until she works alone.

"During my training when I wasn't allowed to answer certain kinds of emergency calls, I resented it and so did the men in the field. They felt if we are going to be out there we should be doing the same job they are. I agree. I don't want anyone telling me I can't handle something because I am a woman. Now the men see we've been out in the field almost a year and still haven't worked alone. They can be assigned to one-man units after their three-month training. It's the final test."

Her superiors at the station obviously have more confidence in the "Ladies on Patrol" than do the higher-ups downtown because Deputies Miles and Barbara Birkeland were assigned to one-man units this spring. Deputy Miles found the experience — which included single-handedly holding a suspect at gunpoint until another unit arrived — fantastic but it only lasted two days. "Downtown," without any explanation, ordered them put back in two-man cars.

The silence is very frustrating

The silence from "Downtown" as to why decisions are made or not made regarding this program probably has been the most frustrating aspect of it to the participants and their partners. The sheriff will not comment on the program at all until the evaluation has been completed and this has led to endless speculation at the station level: He favors the program, he doesn't favor the program, the program will end in September, someone is just using it to write a book and so on.

Part of the silence, says Sgt. Dugas, stems from the fact no one "Downtown" wants to prejudice the program before the evaluation is complete. The evaluation is being done by an independent research team of psychologists, college professors and statisticians in order to "insure fairness, give credibility from academia and make sure there is no in-house prejudice." One wonders, however, who makes the immediate decisions regarding the program and who will decide in September whether it has been a success or failure — the sheriff or the independent evaluators. At stake is the job future of every woman deputy on the department.

The reason is that men and women are now on the same promotion list and compete equally for all jobs. Deputy Miles, through her success, can make it easier for women to make sergeant and lieutenant — the highest a woman can go at present. She feels the weight of this responsibility.

"The 400 women in the L.A. sheriff's department are apprehensive about the 12 of us. If we don't do well, their chances of getting into the field are less. And one of the qualifications for promotion is can he or she work everywhere in this department. A lot of the men that are evaluating a person for promotion say, 'Well, she's a woman and she can't work wayside maximum' — which is a men's prison — or patrol and she'll get an 85 per cent promotability instead of a 100; this keeps her off the sergeant's list. There are some women now that are very bitter about this and our only chance is to be able to say, 'Yes, I can work everywhere; I can work patrol.'"

Lt. Beggs confirms that women will have a better chance to be promoted to sergeant if they have had patrol car experience. "The department is looking for the totally experienced person. People who have had a variety of experiences are more rounded and a better officer for that. And these ladies will have more to bring to the job when promoted."

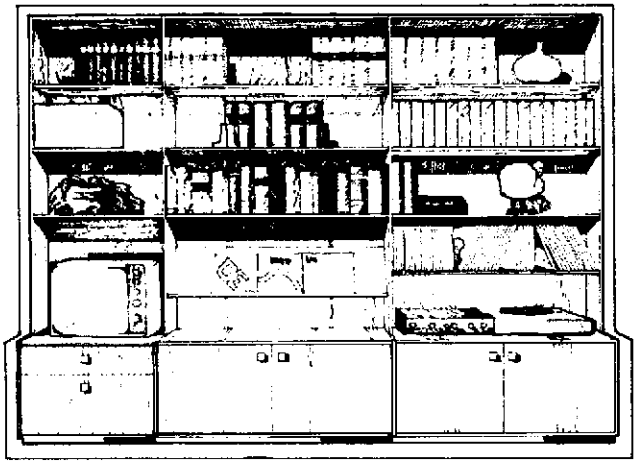

The future of "Ladies on Patrol" does not really seem to be in doubt. Sheriff Pitchess said at the beginning of the program, "I am optimistic that those deputies who are now completing their instruction will be the forerunners of an innovative new concept in serving and protecting the people of Los Angeles County." Lt. Beggs says that judging from his experience at the Lakewood station, the program is working out and he "presumes they will be around."

Will it be mere tokenism?

What is still in doubt, however, is whether women will be allowed, without limit as to numbers, to try out for the program and succeed or fail on their own merits. If the program turns into a public relations gimmick with two or three token women at each station and if the women are protected from either failure or success as a full law enforcement officer, then the male deputies will never regard them as equal and the program will not have lived up to its promise.

Deputy Miles has moved on to another partner, another shift, another part of the Lakewood station territory. She is philosophical. "I don't feel I've proven myself to myself, but I realize everyone I work with has something to teach me. I'm grateful I've had this opportunity. This year has been the most growing experience — outside of loving someone — I've ever had." □

Solvang

By MARGARET RAU

On the other side of the Santa Ynez mountains from Santa Barbara stands the sparkling little Danish town of Solvang. The valley which surrounds the town is typical California countryside. Semi-arid farm lands, which produce rich crops only through irrigation, stretch away eastward from the purple mountains. It is a far cry from the flat lush Danish countryside. But Solvang itself is so typically Danish that visitors from Denmark feel easily at home in it.

The charming little town is the direct result of the devotion to his ancestral homeland of a 74-year-old third generation Dane, Ferdinand Sorensen. Sorensen's Danish provincial home, which he built himself, stands on a bluff outside town.

Today a high luxuriant hedge hides the Sorensen home from casual passersby. It's only after you've stepped through the gate that you find yourself looking across well-manicured green lawns at a house that might have come directly out of a Hans Christian Andersen storybook. The illusion is maintained inside as well as out. Living room and kitchen are furnished in comfortable Danish farmhouse style, with beautiful handcarved beams and paneling and built-in nooks crafted by Sorensen himself. The exquisite needlepoint cushions and wall hangings have been created by his stately wife Gudrun.

Sorensen, a wiry muscular man with a thatch of white hair and piercing blue eyes, was born on a farm in Nebraska where his people pioneered. The first family home was a log cabin. Descendants built the kind of box-like house for which the early Midwest is noted. But though the Sorensen house was American in style the family along with the other Danes in the community were deeply rooted in Danish culture.

The town had a Danish folk school patterned after similar schools in Denmark. These schools were primarily a place where people could gather of a winter, listen to good lectures, learn singing, put on plays and improve their language. They were the nucleus of the Danish community.

During Sorensen's youth there were about six of these folk schools scattered through the Midwest. Emigrants of Scandanavian descent came to them to learn English and American history. And young American Danes came to learn Danish.

Though the Sorensen family spoke only English at home, young Ferdinand learned Danish at the nearby folk school and soon became fluent in his mother tongue. He was too restless to stay on the farm and drifted to Des Moines, Iowa, where he entered another folk school to take a high school science course, the only formal education he was to have.

At the Des Moines folk school he met his future wife. Gudrun had come from Chicago where her family lived. Because of an unfortunate accident her father, a housepainter, was laid up for several years with broken ankles. During those years Gudrun, who was an accomplished pianist, and her brother, a violinist, supported the family by playing for the nickelodion shows that were so popular in those days.

When Ferdinand met Gudrun she was teaching at the folk school. Admitting to being much taken up with music himself, he courted and married her. For a couple of years they lived in Chicago and then went on to another folk school in Minnesota. Here Gudrun taught music and Ferdinand taught a simple course in science. The school hired him because, not being accredited, it didn't require credentials and Sorensen knew the rudiments of his subject.

When the couple heard about the colony of Danes which had settled at Solvang in 1911, they came to California. Ferdinand was 33 at the time. A conscientious and capable worker, he didn't have any diffuculty finding work with a local builder.

While holding down that job Sorensen studied the plumbing trade by observing the local plumber who installed the fixtures in the new buildings. By the time the plumber was ready to retire Sorensen knew enough about the business to buy him out. For 20 years he served the community as a plumber, taking care not only of Solvang but of the whole Santa Ynez Valley.

Gudrun augmented the family income by giving music lessons. And both Ferdinand and his wife took part in the community life which centered around the folk school that had been established in Solvang. But although the town was strongly Danish, there was nothing to distinguish it from any other small farming community in California.

"In 1933 when we arrived it was just an ordinary western town," Sorensen says. "Most of the people were living in Spanish-style architecture. I was the first one to build a Danish provincial home here."

Sorensen built the first section of his home while working as a plumber. Never having been to Denmark, he took his models from pictures in Danish books and magazines. When he had finished his home, he began building the giant windmill which now stands nearby, a famous landmark that greets the visitor who drives into town down Highway 154 over San Marcos Pass.

The windmill, too, was built on scale from pictures of a famous one in Denmark. Be- 18 cause Sorensen had to fit the work into odd hours, it took him some three or four months to complete it. And as a matter of fact it was never really finished, for it still lacks the canvas sails which are a distinguishing mark of all Danish windmills.

"I meant to put them on, but as soon as I got the trellice work up the wind took hold," Sorensen explains. "And it's been going ever since."

The windmill has seen more uses than simply serving as an eyecatcher for Solvang. For a long while Sorensen used it as a garage. Today he rents it out as an apartment and he never lacks for tenants who like the atmosphere of living in a Danish windmill.

In 1947, after some 20 years of plumbing, Sorensen decided to retire. And he and his wife made their first trip to Denmark. It was to be one of many, for the Sorensens soon came to look on Denmark as their second home.

Actually that first time was more than just a visit. Gudrun and a friend, who was a singer, had arranged a concert tour to Denmark's folk schools. During the course of the tour the Sorensens made a great many friends and saw and fell in love with the countryside. Ferdinand visited the windmill which had served as his model and was pleased to find how exact his replica was and how typically Danish his home was too.

He was catapulted into a new job

When the Sorensens returned to Solvang, Ferdinand found himself catapulted into a new profession — that of builder. Two families asked him to construct Danish provinical homes for them. And some Solvang mer-

Put a few extra cents into your meatloaf, and it'll taste like a million dollars.

When you have to economize, your meals don't have to taste it. So cook budget meals with Angostura, and they'll taste like you were splurging.

A few teaspoons of Angostura cost just a few cents. But when you add them to your meatloaf recipe, interesting things start to happen.

Angostura's secret blend of exotic herbs and spices will unlock flavor you didn't know was there to begin with. It will harmonize the flavor of all the ingredients. And it will give meatloaf a tantalizing aroma. Which is important when you consider the fact that the better food smells, the better it tastes.

With Angostura, your meatloaf may not taste like steak, but it will taste a cut or two above ground beef. And that's important, too.

Because low-cost meals are no economy when your family doesn't want to eat them.

chants, who thought it would be nice to give a Danish atmosphere to their shops, appealed to Sorensen for help.

"I'm sorry to say that it wasn't the Danes who were most interested at first," Sorensen recalls. "It was the Americans who had begun moving in. They liked the quaint unusual Danish style."

It took a lot of work. The buildings had to be refaced and the interiors redesigned to capture the Danish motif. Under Sorensen's direction bindingsvaerk walls were made by implanting heavy beams in the masonry to form the typical geometric designs on Danish house walls. Dormer windows were added. Imitation thatching was created by carving scallops into ordinary wooden shingles and then heating them in big iron kettles until they twisted and warped into a fluffy thatch shape. To hold the "thatch" down, typical Danish crow trees were mounted along the roof ridges. Storks for good luck, gigantic windmills which house Danish shops, cobblestone walks, tiny squares and long arcades complete the illusion.

Other merchants fell into line

As the work progressed and other merchants began to see how commercially attractive the newly created town was to tourists they all began to fall into line. Today even the motels and filling stations have adopted Danish-style architecture. But Sorensen maintains that it was more than commercialism that brought the townspeople together to transform Solvang. He feels that it's a tribute to the community spirit which was engendered by the old folk school, though it has long since closed due to the pressure of modern living.

Today Sorensen has once again changed his occupation. Because more and more of his neighbors have become interested in his beautifully designed and executed interiors, he is in steady demand for both commercial and private buildings. He makes his own carved paneling and beams in the little shop back of his house. And the interiors of some 20 Solvang buildings are testimony to his craftsmanship.

In explaining the motivation which has driven him through his long years of dedication to things Danish Sorensen says, "Emigrants from the Old World come to America thinking they have to become completely Americanized. So they throw everything overboard and arrive empty handed. But to my mind immigrants have a sacred obligation to bring something of value with them from their homelands. Every country no matter how small has something worthwhile to contribute. I don't care whether it's music, literature, buildings or whatever. It's all these contributions that have made our country great.

"That's why I've devoted so much of my life to re-creating Danish architecture here in Solvang. It's my contribution to America." □

DOWN TO THE SEA IN SLIPS

By ALMA KIRKLAND

The USS Manitowoc was home for a group of Long Beach Navy wives for a 23-day trip to Little Creek, Va.

With laundry as a backdrop, the Navy dependents play cards and drink Cokes.

A "dependent's flag," featuring intimate feminine apparel, was hoisted by the wives during the cruise.

Navy ships its dependents

In the seven years I've been writing Navy news, I never dreamed I'd find myself standing on Pier E in Long Beach, waving goodby to my daughter Kris as she shipped out on an LST. A son maybe, but a daughter?

But there I was, as thousands of wives and mothers had been before me, waving frantically and shouting up to the forlorn figure on the third deck, "Don't forget to keep a log," while she, in turn, pointed sunward and garbled down something about there being no fog.

"Not fog, LOG," I screamed as the USS Manitowoc slipped resolutely seaward, and Kris stood waving above the chicken-wire encircled decks and the sassy, bright blue Doughboy pool below.

Kris hadn't joined the Navy. It wasn't anything that drastic. But she was one of a number of Navy wives being transported from Long Beach to Little Creek, Va., on a 23-day trip by Navy vessel.

I thought the experience would be worth jotting down. After all, it was to be the longest military cruise for dependents the Navy had sponsored. But I wasn't too optimistic about the log. After all, wasn't this the daughter who hated any form of English composition in school? The same child who figured fingers were digits for dialing, not writing?

So I wasn't too surprised when some 24 days later after Kris and husband, Lt. John Conrad, had arrived in Little Creek, I received a phone call with all the the inanities that can be packed into three minutes of passing the phone from family member to family member, and finally back to, "Did you write the log?" And then, "Sorry, your three minutes are up."

You can imagine my surprise when, after a time, the postman delivered a thick crumpled manila envelope with 10 cents postage due containing "A Ship's Log" by Kris Conrad.

I'll pass it along with some maternal editing.

FIRST DAY:

My first night aboard, while tied up at the dock, was fairly uneventful with one ominous happening in the form of a dead bug in my roommate's bed. (Yes, I said roommate; our husbands are far down the hall in their own quarters.)

Morning was announced by steampipes, which happen to be over my bunk, clanging and banging into action at 4 a.m.

SECOND DAY:

Everyone was up and raring to go by 7:30 except the smart ones. I zipped down to breakfast as John raced past me to work. I thought the reason I got up so early was so we could eat together. Tomorrow I won't be so ambitious.

After breakfast we sat around until anchors aweigh at 10 a.m. It was an odd feeling to be on this side of the pier, waving at my mother, when the ship pulled away.

At 11 a.m. we were officially welcomed aboard by Capt. Frank Poyet.

Found out the barber is a beautician, so we even have a beauty parlor, by appointment only.

Lunch was at 11:30, followed by drills for general quarters, for man overboard and for abandon ship. What a panic. People running everywhere and no one knowing where to go. Eventually we all arrived at the appointed destination and even learned how to use our lifejackets.

Everyone took a dose of Dramamine; therefore, no one seasick—yet. But we are all exhausted. We took naps and most people were in bed by 10. It's just like being a baby again; the rocking of the ship is like a cradle. Let's hope the hand that rocks it stays gentle.

Have seen less of my husband here than at home. He did say I could join him at 4 a.m. while he has the watch and we could spend a whole four hours together.

Maybe tomorrow.

THIRD DAY:

Did get up at 6 a.m. Fooled you, didn't I? Stood the watch with John. It's not so hard to get up early because our room is like a hot box. All the wives have been standing watches, learning the helm, plotting the course and counting shooting stars.

While we were getting under way, our swimming pool was badly damaged, but as of yesterday it was back in working condition and will be officially opened today.

No seasickness yet. We must be acquiring our sealegs. The opening of the pool has been postponed due to cold weather.

FOURTH DAY:

Well, the seas seem to be getting a little rougher and people seem to be getting a lot sicker. In fact, the children spent most of the day vomiting. The johns seem to be holding up OK though, although it's not unusual to hear a lot of retching in the next stall.

The old salts aboard just keeping smiling and saying, "This is nothing. Just wait till she really starts rolling."

'Wait 'til she really starts rolling'

I can hardly wait.

They were supposed to open the pool for the kids, but due to high winds it has sprung holes and is falling apart. Therefore, the official launching of the pool has been delayed until further notice.

My roommate Judy Anderson and I have volunteered to work a few hours each day in the library. This burst of generosity may have been prompted by the fact that the ship is rolling and Judy is six months pregnant. The library is a lot more comfortable than being below decks.

FIFTH DAY:

We were all awakened this morning at 4 by the rolling of the ship—all the women, that is.

The old salts brought good tidings again. "These are only five to seven-degree rolls and before this trip is over you can expect double that. Ha. Ha."

I haven't fallen out of bed since I was a kid, but if this gets worse, down will come cradle, baby and all.

The weather has been bad—hot, humid, overcast and raining. The girls have prayed for sun so we could do a little sunbathing. Today we thought we had it. We all scurried into our bikinis and scrambled to the signal bridge, set up the lounge chairs, put on the tanning lotion, and the sun disappeared.

We arrive in Acapulco tomorrow for four glorious, sun-filled days off the ship.

We had the social event of the cruise tonight, a dance on the main deck. We all stood around until we became brave, like in junior high. Then the enlisted men began to branch out and started asking the officers' wives to dance. It really was fun. I even got John to stop working long enough to dance with me.

11th DAY:

The gap in communication has been due to a little rest and recreation in Acapulco. Everybody had a good time and nobody seemed overjoyed to get back on board yesterday.

Then last night all hell broke loose. It was a nightmare and I was too sick to write anything.

When we left Acapulco, the weather was idyllic—sunny, clear and the sea was calm. By mid-afternoon the ship was beginning to roll. It was windy and the ocean was choppy.

By the time dinner was over, Montezuma's revenge had struck half the people and the other half were seasick. I had a touch of both maladies, so went to bed at 7:30.

By 9 p.m. I was staring at the steampipe overhead and the ship was rolling worse; in fact, it increased until I felt it would turn over completely.

We had 50 knots of relative wind and 20 to 40-degree rolls all night long.

The men were running around like crazy, trying to secure things. Women and children were trying desperately to keep from falling out of bed and, since nothing had been secured because rough weather hadn't been expected, things were flying all over the place.

Children were screaming, women yelling and you've never heard so many four-letter words in all your life. The whole thing was absolutely unreal at 5:30 a.m. and I still hadn't been to sleep.

I lay in that upper bunk all night with my white knuckles holding on for dear life. We have rails you can attach to help keep you in bed but they didn't inspire much confidence in that weather.

One gal was hit by a ladder and one had to have two stitches taken over her eye. She was sitting on the floor, figuring that was the safest place, when she was thrown across the room.

One of the forklifts on the deck managed to break loose and self destruct. All our rooms look like disaster areas, but aside from that we all came out OK—but exhausted.

John came in and got me and told me I could sleep in his room because he had to help secure the ship. By that time I'd been in bed for 10 hours and hadn't closed my eyes, and it was all the security I needed because as soon as I hit the bed, I was out like a light.

Most of the women and kids slept all day.

We changed courses, and the weather has calmed considerably. It's still pretty rocky, but compared to last night, it's smooth.

Today is our first wedding anniversary and the crew bought us two lovely wooden plaques and baked us a cake. The cake was a little lopsided but considering the circumstances I think it was an accomplishment above and beyond.

John has the 4 a.m. watch, so he went to bed early and here I am in my bunk— alone. This is one anniversary I'll never forget!

12th DAY:

I forgot to mention that while we were in Acapulco I was eaten alive by some mysterious bug. My legs are completely covered with bites. In fact, one leg has more than 62 blotches.

At first they itched so I could hardly stand it and now they have turned bright purple. Really attractive in a bikini.

The water was a little rough today but compared to the other night it was nothing. Very few people have been seasick since that night as we are all pretty good about taking our Dramamine.

Things seem to be getting back to normal, except for the swimming pool which is now beyond repair.

13th DAY:

First thing I did this morning was go up to the top deck and sunbathe. The water was like glass—great improvement—and the sun was perfect for tanning. Also the purple spots are beginning to disappear.

Tomorrow we arrive in Rodman, the city this side of the Panama Canal, and will stay there over night.

In Rodman we will be picking up 75 dependents who want to make the trip through the canal, so we're really going to be crowded for a few hours. I'm sure the crew is overjoyed.

All the wives are writing a letter to Chief of Naval Operations, Adm. Elmo Zumwalt, telling him how much we appreciate the opportunity of making this trip. We feel all Navy wives should have at least one chance for an experience like this.

15th DAY:

Arrived in Panama yesterday and it was hot, hot, hot. The base looked like a deserted bunch of quonset huts set in the jungle. Stayed there until after dinner and went to town which was completely closed down. Ended up spending the evening in the non-air conditioned Officers' Club which shut its doors at 10 p.m.

Not too swinging a place to visit, and I sure wouldn't want to live there.

At 6 a.m. we had exactly 97 local Panamanian dependents board to go through the canal with us. What a pain! After two weeks, it's amazing how possessive we women have become of "our" ship.

Now we can see how the men felt when we invaded their territory. But the entire crew has made a supreme effort to be as helpful as possible and I'm sure we've been a nuisance to them.

Back to the Panama Canal. The five-and-a-half-hour trip through it brought back all the things I'd learned in school, with the added excitement of really being there.

The first look at the Atlantic Ocean wasn't much of a thrill, as I must confess it doesn't look much different from the Pacific.

We let the dependents off at the end of the canal and "our" ship is back to normal.

16th DAY:

We are settling down to the monotony of eating, napping, eating and going to bed while the men carry out their normal duties. I think we're all kind of anxious to get off this beast—at least I am.

I worked in the supply office today and it really helped pass the time. I think the hardest thing about the trip for the women is boredom.

17th DAY:

Today is Sunday and supposedly not a working day, but John had to work, so I thought I might as well too. This cruise has really helped me see what it is that he does. I don't think any woman really knows what a sailor's life is all about until she travels aboard ship with him.

I'll tell you about a pretty typical day for John:

Providing he doesn't have the 4 to 8 a.m. watch, he gets up between 6 and 7, drinks half a dozen cups of coffee, eats breakfast (served between 6:30 and 7:30), then, if he doesn't have the 8 to 12 watch, he starts his work.

He goes through all the messages that came in during the night, routes them and sends answers to those pertaining to him. This usually takes up part or all of the morning. Next he makes a morning tour of all his spaces and confers with his subordinates.

About this time I meet him for lunch. Then it's back to work reading and writing more messages, attending meetings, preparing lectures, preparing schedules and all the technical things that have to do with his job as operations officer.

All this amid a million interruptions.

This takes him through dinner. If I am lucky, he takes an hour off to eat, then back to work until about 10 or 11 p.m., followed by a good-night kiss and off to our separate beds.

Of course, he never really has a complete day like this as he stands one out of every five watches, which amounts to one a day or night. I haven't seen him work less than 12 hours since we left Long Beach and usually it's more like 16.

Knowing all this will help me understand how he feels when he's out to sea again. I know one thing for sure. I could never, ever be a sailor, and why any woman would want to go to sea is beyond me. I can't wait to get off and have my feet on solid ground again.

We arrive in Puerto Rico tomorrow.

21st DAY:

This is our last day in Puerto Rico and our last liberty port before we reach home. See how anxious I am to get off this ship; I'm already calling Little Creek home and I've never been there.

The beaches here are beautiful, much like Hawaii. We also went to St. Thomas for a day and a night. We really enjoyed the calm, peaceful atmosphere, and besides, it's a duty-free port so I shopped like crazy.

We leave tomorrow for Virginia and will arrive in just a few more days—none too soon. In fact, I haven't seen one happy face aboard tonight. It seems nobody wants to get under way again.

LAST DAY:

Well, this is it, the end of the cruise and farewell to my steampipe alarm clock, tennis shoes and capris, standing the early watch, hoisting me and the 10 pounds I've gained into the upper bunk, gangways, ladders, hatches and Dramamine.

It's also the end of unbelievable star-filled skies, the stillness you can't put into words, not having to do the cooking, the ecstasy of sighting land and gliding into a romantic port of call, the beauty of tropical Acapulco and Puerto Rico and knowing the joy a sailor feels when he has a three-day pass.

It's also time for medals of good conduct for the crew of the Mighty Mannie who made our trip a pleasure, rough weather not withstanding.

Another medal goes to roommate Judy, the expectant mother. She did better than all of us put together when the going was rough. She didn't complain or get seasick, and her stomach acted as an anchor in bed when the ship was rolling.

As for John and me, this cruise has been a beautiful, unifying experience. We're closer than we've ever been. And happier. □

Roger Moore: the new 007

By REX REED

Roger Moore doesn't exactly fit the Ian Fleming image of James Bond but he comes closer than his predecessors.

The publicity shouts, "Roger Moore IS James Bond!" and I guess that's true enough. He certainly is playing him to the hilt. Sean Connery got sick of the role. George Lazenby lasted through one round, then went off to a monastery to meditate. Now there's a new 007 and Roger Moore says, "I don't know why they picked me, but the money is fantastic, so I think I'll stick around." Roger, who used to be prettier than his leading ladies, got roughed up a little for Live and Let Die, the eighth Ian Fleming novel about Bond to be filmed, but it wasn't all in the line of duty.

We were down in the Caribbean. About 100 Jamaicans lined the cliff above the road in bright native costumes, some of them carrying baskets of bananas on their heads. Several toothless ladies stretched out a sign reading, "The Roger Moore Fan Club is here!" One woman didn't seem interested in the action at all. She was busy knocking breadfruit from a tree. Half an hour later, she reappeared with 70 pounds of breadfruit on her head. A nice day's profit. Where else can you watch a movie being made and make a living at the same time?

Suddenly James Bond, waving his Walther PPK38, came careening through a sugar cane field in a double-decker London bus. The villains followed in hot pursuit in a police car. The chase narrowed into a dirt road. OOPS! There was a covered bridge ahead. No escape. Would he crash? Would this be the end of 007? The bus smashed into the bridge. There was an ear-splitting explosion. The top of the London bus crashed to the ground. There was applause from the cliffs when Roger Moore emerged, safe and sound and ready for the next adventure. The whole thing will have to be re-shot later with the top of the bus falling on the police car and killing the villains inside. When you see the final movie, you'll think it all happened at once. That's the magic of movies. What looks either accidental or deceptively simple on screen actually takes weeks of careful preparation and painstaking coordination to accomplish.

In Live and Let Die there are more of these narrow escapes than usual. Roger Moore bursts into the mystical world of a black master criminal, Dr. Kananga, who plans to bludgeon the Western powers with the way-out weapons of voodoo and hard drugs. Shooting started in New Orleans with a motorboat chase in which 13 high-powered aquajets and 14 other boats with 150-horsepower outboard engines roared to their destruction in a murky bayou. In another scene he destroys eight airplanes, flying through an airport hangar, ripping the wings off a plane and hitting a DC-3 on the landing strip beyond. There's more. He crashes over a wall on a motorcycle and falls into the sea from which he is carried 800 feet into the air hanging onto a kite. Then the company moved to Montego Bay where Dr. Kananga's plantation for producing hard drugs is protected by a sea of crocodiles. Roger had to wrestle with live crocodiles in a pit surrounded by 1,000 crocs and alligators. At one point, while he's taking a bath, a poisonous snake comes out of the shower head and crawls into the bathtub. Add to that shark fishing, sea chases and scarecrows with TV cameras for eyes and mouths that kill off enemies while they are picnicking and you have another dandy 007 concoction — with equal parts espionage, derring-do and high camp.

"They never kill James Bond, do they?" somebody asked.

"Would you, if you were Harry Saltzman?" answered Roger Moore.

Like Joseph E. Levine, Saltzman is a jovial, rotund fellow who can easily be classified as one of the last of the big-spender producers. In 1960 Saltzman bought up the rights to 12 James Bond novels and all of his short stories because Ian Fleming and he shared the same lawyer. Fleming had turned everybody else down. Alfred Hitchcock had tried to buy the Bond stories. William Paley of CBS-TV had tried to buy them. Fleming just wasn't interested. "He hated movies," smiles Saltzman, "and had only seen two in his life — Gone With The Wind and Cavalcade. He only gave me the rights because he wanted to set up a trust fund for his children. He hated the choice of Sean Connery, but otherwise he had no opinion of the Bond pictures." He died four years later and to date Saltzman has made 225 million dollars. James Bond is here to stay, immovable and indestructible as the mainland of China.

"I don't think it matters who plays 007," says Saltzman. "There are theater owners throughout the world who still think James Bond is the name of an actor. They never heard of Sean Connery. The Bond pictures have all made money and the grosses keep going up all the time on re-releases. Connery got tired of the image because he wanted to be a serious actor, but he did all right. He made six and a half million dollars alone on his percentages, not counting his salaries. We make 'em big and we make 'em expensive. This one has a budget of seven million dollars. The one with George Lazenby, On Her Majesty's Secret Service, was the most expensive because of all the snow stunts and bad weather conditions that caused delays. But most of them cost around seven million. We've even got museums begging for all the James Bond cars and guns and gadgets. We have never lost money. Even the Lazenby one, which was the least successful film in the series, grossed 24 million. So it doesn't matter whether Roger Moore or Sean Connery or Joe Smith plays 007 and it doesn't matter whether they get good reviews or bad reviews."

I asked Guy Hamilton, who also directed Goldfinger and Diamonds Are Forever, if anybody had ever been seriously injured on a Bond film. "Oh, yes, and the insurance rates are very high, especially for the stuntmen. But we nearly lost Roger Moore on this one. Not in the film, but in rehearsals. We taught him how to drive a speedboat for the water chase and he ran out of gas and hit a bank and it knocked him out of the boat and almost broke all of his teeth out."

Fleming's description of James Bond in the books was that of a skinny man with a scar on his face. His ideal choice was always Hoagy Carmichael. That's a far cry from Sean Connery and ,even the boyish-looking, 45-year-old Roger Moore, but at least Moore is the closest yet. The son of a London policeman, he started out as a cartoonist and tea server in a publicity office. An extra job in a Shakespearean movie led to drama classes, modeling and eventually a trip to America, where he was signed by MGM. He never got the roles and ended up as the pretty boy who lost Elizabeth Taylor to Van Johnson in The Last Time I Saw Paris or got upstaged by Ann Blyth's horse in The King's Thief.

"It's a period in my life I just laugh about now," he grins. "I remember my biggest part was opposite Lana Turner in a bomb called Diane. Time magazine said 'Lana Turner as Diane de Poitiers walked on the screen in a clattering of heels and a fluttering of false eyelashes, followed by a lump of English roast beef.' I was the English roast beef. Then they asked me to leave. 'Just check in your wardrobe and clear out' is the way they put it. I arrived in America on April Fool's Day 1954. I should have known that meant something. I made one picture for Warner Brothers after leaving MGM and that was the worst one I ever did. It was called The Miracle and I played the Duke of Wellington's nephew who had an affair with Carroll Baker that turned her into a nun. All I remember was leading a parade of soldiers through the streets of Brussels in Rosalind Russell's corset from Auntie Mame. Don't laugh. It's true. I wore her leftover costumes."

It was The Saint on TV that finally made Roger Moore more than just another pretty face. It ran for seven years, was sold to 80 countries, and is still being shown in re-runs.

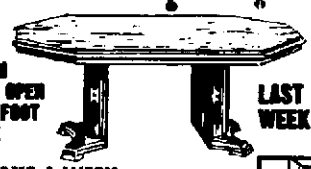

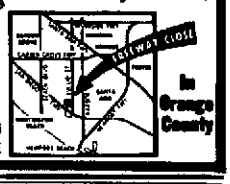

"The only things I will not do are movies that have anything to do with putting down the police or making their job harder," he says. "We have enough trouble keeping law and order as it is. And I would never run around bare-assed. I've been in too many of those epics where they throw the pages of the script away and say 'And now we do the South American version." He finds a joke in every situation and for an actor who is going to get a lot of ribbing about being James Bond, superhero, he has a gentle sense of humor. On the day I visited the set, he was sporting an ugly gash on his perfect forehead.

"Did you get that from the bus crash? Or the motorcycle crash? Or the motorboat crash? Or the battle with the deadly crocodiles?" I asked.

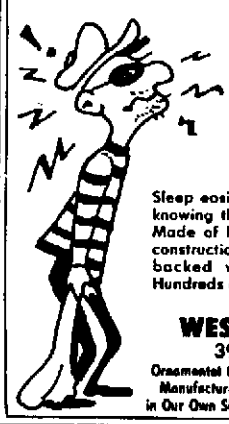

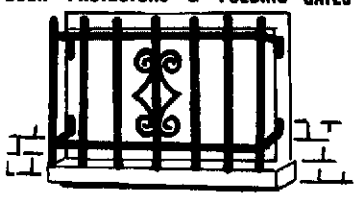

"Would you believe I cut it shampooing my hair in the shower this morning? I got out of the shower and there was blood on my hand. I fainted three times," said James Bond. □

GOURMET

by Tedd Thomey

When he isn't abroad making movies, actor Robert Mitchum sometimes dines out in Orange County. One of his favorite restaurants is Dimitri's, 907 S. Beach Blvd. near Ball Road, Anaheim, where he enjoys the lamb shish kabob broiled on a skewer ($5.25.)

Mitchum is a quiet man who doesn't have a lot to say. On one of his visits, however, he was in a more talkative mood. He enjoyed a conversation with owner Jimmy Gantes, talking about the scenic wonders of Greece where the actor has done film work and which Jimmy has frequently visited.

Afterward, Mitchum spoke to Jimmy's eldest son, saying warmly: "George, I want you to know you've got a great old man!"

That comment sums up how many people feel about Jimmy. He is an unusual restaurateur, gracious and conscientious. His well-trained staff is directed by his sons George and John as well as Bill Lenhart and his wife Kiki. They are all gracious and conscientious. As a result, Dimitri's is the kind of restaurant which offers genuine hospitality and comfort to its guests, taking care of all the small and large details which make dining out so pleasurable.

Dimitri's, which serves every day from 4 p.m., is only minutes from Long Beach, Knott's Berry Farm and Disneyland. Award-winning chef Joe La Russo, on the staff for many years, supervises a talented crew, turning out the choicest beef, lamb and ocean dishes. Among the house specialities — universally praised — are the filet mignon junior and roast prime rib au jus, both $5.50; the beef kabob on a skewer, $5.25, and a selection of other steaks, including the $6.75 broiled New York cut, which is such a triumph that I sometimes describe it as "the perfect steak."

Other delights include chicken saute chasseur with mushrooms and white wine sauce, $3.75; fried deep sea scallops, dipped in egg, $4.50; baked Alaska king crab au gratin en casserole, $5.50, and filet of sole with almonds, $4.25. All are with relishes, soup du jour or generous salad, baked potato or rice, spiced apple ring and warm garlic bread.

GUIDE

UNLESS YOU'RE a teen-ager with a bottomless stomach, you probably should skip lunch if you plan to have dinner at Nino's, 3853 Atlantic Ave., a friendly, inviting Italian resturant in the Bixby Knolls section of Long Beach.

It's the kind of beloved establishment which people recommend to their friends with such high praise as: "It's absolutely the best. You won't believe there can be such flavors in meats and sauces until you try Nino's. And be prepared to eat course after course. . .after course. . ."

Owned by chef Vincenzo Cristiano, "the king of Italian foods," and his cheerful wife Inge, Nino's this month will mark its 15th anniversary at the same location. Aided by their sons Nino and Mike, the Cristianos operate the restaurant daily and Sunday from 4 p.m. on. It is closed Tuesdays.

Decorated with an old world wishing well and Italian wine barrels, Nino's offers dinners from $3.45 to over $5. The feast includes a two-dish antipasto, a big bowl of steaming, fresh soup; salad with Italian dressing or bleu cheese, entree, hot garlic bread, beverage and a superb peach melba dessert.

Also featured are a la carte entrees for smaller appetites, pizza, sandwiches, salads, beer and unusually good wines. Among Vincenzo's masterpieces, created with love and care, are rigatoni with Genovesa sauce, linguini with clam sauce, lasagna, manicotti stuffed with cheese, gnocchi Napoletana, fetuccine Alfredo, chicken cacciatore or Italiano, sausage with pepper and mushrooms, veal Milanese, veal parmigiana, veal scaloppine and veal Caruso. Nino's has four varieties of scaloppine and each is a gem.

Born in Italy, Vincenzo received his culinary training in the finer kitchens of Naples, renowned for its imaginative restaurants and great chefs. Each entree at Nino's is prepared to individual order, using the freshest, costliest ingredients.

WORKSHOP

A storage pergola with style

By Steve Ellingson

Who says that a storage shed has to look utilitarian just because it is? The unique styling of the pergola shown here is a complement to any kind of house or any lot situation. It has a hundred different uses. Since the roof is paneled, it makes a shady and dry place for your barbecue table and benches along with a cheerful eating area. The storage compartment has doors on both sides, a wonderful place to keep garden and carpentry tools, bicycles, barbecue equipment and dozens of other items. And — if you gardeners need a potting shed, this one can't be beat. It puts all your gardening equipment and supplies, including soil, sand and leaf mold within easy reach, all beautifully organized. If you have a swimming pool, just leave out the shelves and you have a cabana for dressing and keeping your pool equipment. The roof may be extended for a carport, in case you need one.

Building this attractive, practical storage pergola in your yard is an easier job than you'd guess. It was designed expressly for amateur weekend carpenters. It's a permanent home improvement, well worth the labor and material cost. Because it's paneled and roofed with completely waterproof exterior type plywood, it will last as long as your house. Not expensive either, when you do it yourself.

To obtain the easy-to-follow storage pergola plan No. 382, send $1 (add 25 cents extra per pattern for airmail delivery) by currency, check or money order to:

WALTER SCOTT'S

Want the facts? Want to learn the truth about prominent personalities? Want informed opinion? Write Walter Scott, Parade, 733 3rd Ave., New York, N.Y. 10017. Your full name will be used unless otherwise requested. Volume of mail received makes personal replies impossible.

Q. Is Eugene McCarthy going to run in 1974 for U.S. Senator from New Hampshire?—Julius Fischer, Hanover, N.H.
A. Good chance. He is testing out the waters. If he buys some property in New Hampshire, chances are excellent that he will campaign for the Senate in 1974.

Q. I hear that an exhaustive work is underway on Richard Nixon's early legal career, his first days in politics, his association with the Murray Chotiner school of campaigning. I understand, too, that an ex-Secret Service agent has been employed to do the research. Can you confirm?—P.F., Syracuse, N.Y.
A. Irving Wallace, the popular novelist, is researching a non-fiction book on Nixon's early legal career in Whittier, Calif. Wallace plans to call his book, The Grand Bazaar, and it will probably be written on a case-to-case basis.

LINDA LOVELACE AND CHUCK TRAYNOR

Q. Will Deep Throat starring Linda Lovelace become the most profitable film of the 20th century? Can you tell us anything about Miss Lovelace? How much did she earn from working in that hard-core pornographic, disgraceful film?—D.T., New York, N.Y.
A. Deep Throat cost $25,000 to produce. It was shot in New York and Miami in 18 days. The film will probably gross $50 million. Miss Lovelace got $1250 for acting in the picture. She is 22, the daughter of a New York City traffic cop. She was reared in Hartsdale, N.Y., attended parochial schools, lives now in Malibu, Calif., is most friendly with Chuck Traynor, 35, her mentor, who is a former bar manager and photographer. Linda Lovelace is not her real name. She and Traynor have set up Linda Lovelace enterprises, hope to make a financial killing in nightclubs. On the basis of Deep Throat, Miss Lovelace's acting talent is invisible.

Q. Peter Falk, the TV star of Columbo*—does he have only one real eye? And Burt Reynolds—is it true that he will allow no one but Dinah Shore to put on his hairpiece?—Alice Margolies, Los Angeles, Calif.*
A. Peter Falk lost his right eye at age 3 because of a tumor. Burt Reynolds prefers to put on his own hairpiece. Hairdressers do the job for him when he's working in a film.

PETER FALK

BURT REYNOLDS

Q. Is the Duchess of Windsor receiving $1.5 million as an advance for her memoirs?—Lois Chester, Baltimore, Md.
A. She is not. Writer Stephen Birmingham called upon the duchess, who is approaching 80, in Paris some weeks ago. Birmingham offered to collaborate with her on a new autobiography or on updating her old memoirs. The duchess wanted more money than Mr. Birmingham's publishers were willing to offer. The result is that Birmingham will write an unauthorized biography of the duchess on his own.

Q. Who is the most famous and richest athlete in the world. I say Jack Nicklaus. My brother says Muhammad Ali. What do you say?—Ed Brinkman, Philadelphia, Pa.
A. Best bet would be Edson Arantes do Nascimento, the Brazilian soccer player known as Pele. Pele who earns approximately $1.5 million annually, pays more income tax than any other individual in Brazil. He is 32, 5 feet 7, 140 pounds, has scored 1300 goals in his career.

PELE AND WIFE, ROSEMARY

Q. Do you have information on Dr. Lewis J. Fielding, the Beverly Hills psychiatrist? His office was broken into because he treated Daniel Ellsberg. Also who was the brilliant genius in the White House who hired Howard Hunt in the first place only to have Hunt foul up the Dita Beard-ITT case, the Watergate case, and the Ellsberg case?—L. O. L., Whittier, Calif.
A. Dr. Lewis J. Fielding, born in New York City on Oct. 2, 1909, was graduated from the University of Zurich in 1935, licensed to practice psychiatry in California since 1949. Along with Dr. Ralph Greenson, Fielding is regarded as one of the doyens of psychoanalysis in Southern California. Like most analysts, Dr. Fielding does not keep detailed case studies of his patients. Any professional intelligence agent should have known that.

"The brilliant genius" who hired Howard Hunt was Charles Colson, former White House special counselor and now a member of the Washington, D.C., law firm of Colson & Shapiro.

AVERELL

RANDOLPH

Q. Randolph Churchill, son of Winston—was he a big, fat, drunken, worthless slob? His first wife is now married to Averell Harriman—when did she meet Harriman?—Robert Eady, Chapel Hill, N.C.
A. Churchill was a fat, slothful, alcoholic bore. His wife, Pamela, met Mr. Harriman during World War II, married him in 1971 after a friendship of 30 years.

Q. Can you tell me why President Nixon refuses to appoint Malcolm Toon, the U.S. Ambassador to Yugoslavia, our next Ambassador to the Soviet Union? Is it because he's a career officer?—Mary Larlovic, Chicago, Ill.
A. Reportedly because the Soviets want some well-known figure such as David Rockefeller rather than a Russian-speaking, foreign service career veteran like Toon.

Watergate Question

Could a Lie Detector Tell the Truth?

by George Michaelson

Why not use a lie detector (or polygraph) to see who is telling the truth about Watergate?

No sooner had the Senate hearings begun than this question arose, and Sen. Samuel Ervin (D., N.C.), chairman of the Senate's investigative committee, promptly dismissed it. The polygraph, he said, is nothing more than "twentieth-century witchcraft."

Notwithstanding the Senator's remarks, at least two Watergate figures (Gerald Alch, former lawyer for convicted conspirator James McCord, and Charles Colson, ex-White House aide) have voluntarily gone ahead and taken the lie-detector test; both were judged to be telling the truth. And the likelihood is that before the hearings are over, others will voluntarily take tests.

Which raises the question: Is the polygraph reliable, or is it "witchcraft"?

Answers Richard Paterson, president of the 900-member American Polygraph Association: "When administered by professionals it is accurate about 95 percent of the time. The thing is, you've got to know what you're doing. There is no question the polygraph could be useful in the Watergate—or any other investigation."

Training operators

Currently there are some 1200 professional polygraph operators in the United States, and most have been trained by one of the 10 APA-accredited schools. Such training, which usually takes six months or more, involves learning how to operate the polygraph—a sensitive device which typically records changes in blood pressure, breathing rate and skin moisture, as the subject is responding to questions. (Presumably, if he is not answering truthfully, he will get anxious, and as a result his blood pressure will go up, his breathing will become uneven, and his hands will sweat.)

Actually, there is nothing new about using physical reactions to test for the truth. The ancient Chinese, operating on the principle that a guilty or anxious person's mouth doesn't secrete much saliva (in other words, becomes dry), would make a questioned person chew rice powder and then spit it out; if the powder came out dry, he was deemed a liar. The Bedouins of Arabia used the same principle: a suspect was forced to lick a hot iron, and if his tongue were burned—because there was no saliva on it—he was judged guilty.

Modern methods

The modern-day lie detector, of course, is considerably more sophisticated—and less uncomfortable—than these older methods. In fact, since its invention 50 years ago by a Berkeley, Calif., policeman, the polygraph has been steadily refined to the point where machines can record as many as 20 different physical reactions, and some of the data can be immediately processed and analyzed by a computer. More important, some authorities say polygraph operators themselves have become increasingly better trained and more proficient in using their machines.

The American Civil Liberties Union, however, disagrees. A recent ACLU report says, "Today there is no valid statistical evidence that the polygraph is accurate. Because of the many variables and sources of error and the total reliance on predominantly unqualified examiners, it is unlikely that the polygraph machine as used today is accurate. Moreover, since there appears to be no truth in the fundamental assumption of the polygraph, that lying produces meaningfully recordable physiological data, it seems unlikely that current technology can ever lead to an accurate lie-detector machine."

Even polygraph operators concede that sometimes mistakes are made. Says Richard Arther, head of the private firm, Scientific Lie Detection Inc. who tested Charles Colson: "Any polygraph examiner who says he's never been fooled is lying himself. But the interesting thing is, that when we are fooled, it is almost always by someone with little education, who doesn't understand right from wrong. An intelligent subject, and especially one with something to lose if he's caught lying, will rarely, if ever, beat the polygraph."

Who's lying?

At this point, the principal use of lie detectors is in business—for preemployment interviews or to investigate losses. The APA estimates that 25 percent of the major companies in the U.S. use polygraph tests to screen some employees. Points out Victor Kaufman, a well-known polygrapher who operates in New York City's Wall Street area: "A company can't afford to take chances. You've got banks and trust companies down here with billions of dollars in their vaults, so of course it's worth $50 for them to have potential employees tested out for honesty. True, we can't always spot a bad risk, but believe me, we don't miss many."

Screening applicants

In addition, there has been widespread use of lie detectors throughout the government and in the law enforcement agencies. The CIA and the Defense Department, for example, use the polygraph to screen applicants for sensitive positions. And in police departments in such large cities as Miami, Dallas and New Orleans, candidates are polygraph-tested for criminal records, drug use and other potential problems; and about one-third are dropped as a result of the tests.

The one area, however, where the polygraph has yet to make significant inroads is the place where, according to its proponents, it may eventually prove most valuable: in the courtroom. Until recently, polygraph evidence was considered too unscientific to be admitted as evidence in U.S. courts. But this idea may be changing. In the past year, a half-dozen or so civil and criminal cases in various cities have been decided through voluntary use of polygraph evidence.

For instance, a few months ago in Queens, New York, a man brought a woman friend to court, claiming he had lent her $910 which she refused to pay back; she denied receiving the loan. The judge had both take the lie-detector test, and the woman wound up having to pay back the loan.

They see progress

Not surprisingly, polygraph practitioners have been encouraged by these first glimmers of acceptance in the courts. "I think we're finally opening the door," says APA president Paterson. "The polygraph is coming to be accepted for the valuable tool it really is."

But there is still a long way to go. Summarizes polygraphist Kaufman: "There are still too many guys like Senator Ervin who think the polygraph is 'witchcraft,' for us to expect overnight acceptance. But eventually I'm confident we'll be welcomed by the courts, and even used extensively in such big cases like Watergate."

Maybe. In the meantime, "witchcraft" or not, it appears that the polygraph people are going to have to settle for only a minor part in the Watergate proceedings. For, like almost everything else in that case lie detectors too are not fully trusted.

QUIET WEDDING

Married last month without publicity of any sort: Ann Fleischer Kissinger, 48, to Dr. Saul G. Cohen, 57, famed scientist and professor of chemistry at Brandeis University in Waltham, Mass.

Only four honored guests, the couple's children from previous marriages, were invited to attend the ceremony performed by Rabbi Albert Axelrod of Brandeis and Dr. Thomas Ferrick of the Ethical Society of Boston.

The bride has a 14-year-old daughter, Elizabeth, and an 11-year-old son, David, by her marriage (1945-1964) to Henry Kissinger, President Nixon's National Security Affairs adviser. Dr. Cohen's two children by his marriage to the former Doris Brewer who died in 1971 are Dr. Jonathan Brewer Cohen of Pasteur Institute in Paris, and Elisabeth Cohen, 23, a second-year student at the Harvard University Medical School.

Mrs. Cohen, who has resided in Belmont, Mass., since her divorce from Dr. Kissinger, has consistently refused to live her private life in public.

Dr. Cohen, a Harvard-educated Phi Beta Kappa and Ph.D. recognized in both the industrial and academic worlds for his contributions in the field of chemistry, is also a passionate protector of his privacy.

Result: no newspaper or television interviews. The couple will reside in Lexington, Mass. Dr. Cohen will continue to teach at Brandeis, and Mrs. Cohen, a member of the board of the Ethical Society of Boston will continue to play, as she has in the past, a leading role in community affairs.

BEWARE THE COUNTERFEITER

During fiscal 1972 more than $23 million in phony money was seized in this country.

Jim Rowley, director of the Secret Service, the federal agency assigned to thwart counterfeiters, says "Today's counterfeiter is less concerned with his personal safety and more concerned with volume sales of his merchandise. He makes more deals with more people in shorter periods of time."

At the moment, a multitude of devices for detecting bogus bills are being marketed. None, however, has yet been endorsed by the Secret Service.

The simplest mechanism for spotting phony money is still the naked eye. Usually, the printing on bogus currency appears flat and lacks the three-dimensional quality of genuine notes. The tip-off to a counterfeit coin is its greasy or non-corrugated outer edge.

Secret Service Chief Rowley advises businessmen who've been handed bad money not to return it to the passer -- although instinctively that's the first reaction -- but to attempt to delay the passer while the police or Secret Service are called. If given a bogus bill, try and note the description of the passer and jot down his license number if he drives away. Rowley also advises anyone victimized by a counterfeiter to write his initials and the date on the bill before surrendering it to the authorities.

BLOCKBUSTER COMING

For more than a year now, Anthony Sampson, author of the highly-praised "Anatomy of Britain," has been quietly but industriously researching the operations of the International Telephone & Telegraph Company in America and Europe.

The result of his research will appear July 30 in a work to be entitled "The Sovereign State of ITT." Several chapters of the book are devoted to how ITT used its influence with the Nixon Administration--particularly with John Mitchell, John Ehrlichman, John Dean, John Connally, Maurice Stans and Spiro Agnew--to pressure the government into dropping its antitrust suit against the giant conglomerate.

Typical of the evidence Sampson has dredged up is a letter from ITT's public relations ace, Ned Gerrity, to Agnew. Dated Aug. 7, 1970, it attempts to enlist Agnew to influence indirectly Richard McLaren, then head of the Justice Department's Antitrust Division. At one point McLaren felt strongly that ITT, the 11th largest corporation in the world, should not be allowed to acquire the Hartford Fire Insurance Company. But eventually he came around. He is now a federal judge.

Herewith, a copy of the letter from Gerrity to Agnew.

August 7, 1970

The Honorable
Spiro T. Agnew

Ted:

I deeply appreciate your assistance concerning the attached memo. Our problem is to get to John the facts concerning McLaren's attitude because, as my memo indicates, McLaren seems to be running all by himself.

I think it is rather strange that he is more responsive to Phil Hart and Manny Celler than to the policy of the Administration.

After you read this, I would appreciate your reaction on how we should proceed.

Ned

CLAUDE AND BILLIE

Ever since Intelligence Report wrote a few weeks ago on the activities of Madame Claude of Paris and her clandestine connections with the French foreign office, she has been bothered by several inquiring journalists, each unusually eager to research first-hand her extensive call-girl services.

For many years, Madame Claude and her chief competitor, Madame Billie, have supplied diplomats and businessmen visiting or stationed in Paris with a selection of beautiful "filles de joies," or girls of the night.

Neither madame has ever been harassed by the police, largely, one suspects, because both run respectable establishments and provide information the authorities may care to file.

Madame Claude used to occupy a tastefully furnished apartment at 7 Rue Louis David. Her telephone number, 525-5526, was given only to clients who had been vouched for by a previous client. She charged from $75 to $100 a date, including time out for dinner. If a man sought the companionship of one of her lovelies for an entire 24-hour spin, the charge was $250 a day.

Madame Billie, who occupies the residence at 4 Rue Paul Valéry, phone number: 553-7944, also offered a similar price scale. Madame Billie insisted upon previous introductions by a mutual friend before she would consent to trot out her wares.

One of Madame Claude's "secrétaires" recently told Intelligence Report: "The worst thing that has happened to us in years has been the call-girl scandal in London, the resignation of those two poor Englishmen from Parliament.

"Many people thought the girls involved in that case came from here or were part of an international vice ring. They never were. But now, every politician, every business executive in Europe is scared out of his wits. Business has dropped almost to nothing, and all the crazy journalists are investigating everywhere.

"Claude and Billie have shut down--at least for the summer. I wish the English were not so gauche about sex. Compared to the French, they are in their infancy in such matters. If the British had any culture they would dismiss the whole thing with a shrug. It is not, after all, a Watergate."

THE VATICAN'S SECRET TRIPS

Not much has been said or written about them, but since March of 1971, Vatican envoys have been flying from Rome to Russia, ostensibly to visit officials of the Russian Orthodox Church with headquarters at Zagorsk Monastery, near Moscow.

Last month Vatican officials, headed by Msgr. Angelo Fernandez, arrived in Zagorsk to review the position of Catholics in the Soviet Union. Later they celebrated mass at Moscow's Catholic Cathedral of St. Louis.

The first Vatican official who visited Russia in 1971 was Archbishop Agostino Casaroli who specializes in foreign contacts throughout Communist East Europe. In 1971 he discussed with Russian authorities the religious situation of the Soviet Union's 3.5 million Catholics, most of whom live in the Ukraine and Byelorussia.

The Archbishop's visit was the first official Soviet-Vatican exchange since the Russian Revolution of 1917.

The Soviets are quietly mending fences everywhere.

NO HORROR MOVIES FOR INGRID

What happens when an actress reaches age 58? Particularly when for years she was cast as one of the world's most wholesomely sexy and beautiful screen stars.

INGRID BERGMAN WITH DAUGHTER PIA LINDSTROM

According to Ingrid Bergman who was born in Stockholm on Aug. 8, 1915: "It is difficult to find parts nowadays that are not written for young heroines. You should see some of the film scripts I am offered. "Producers want me to play a witch or a murderess or a very old, feeble grandmother. I am not yet ready for that. Which I suppose is why I spend so much of my working time in the theater. This summer I will be busy in London playing in "The Constant Wife" by Somerset Maugham. For actresses of my age there are more parts in the theater than in films."

10 Noted Doctors Answer 10 Tough Questions

by Donald Robinson

With modern medicine growing more and more complex, with costs soaring and with a trend toward impersonal specialists rather than the more familiar "family doctor," the doctor-patient relationship in America is under considerable stress. Patients, who have long grumbled about their doctors, are being joined by doctors themselves.

"Professionals in the health-care field are becoming more and more concerned about what their patients think of them," says Alexander McMahon, president of the National Hospital Association. "And they should be."

Recently the association, which represents the country's 7100 hospitals, studied the doctor-patient relationship and from this has come a list of 10 questions most often asked by patients. PARADE has submitted the list to 10 leading physicians, whose specialties and backgrounds differ widely.

1. Why don't doctors explain a medical problem in simple language that a patient can understand?

Dr. Michael E. De Bakey, president of the Baylor University College of Medicine in Houston, Tex., and one of the most famous heart surgeons in the United States:

The medical mystique

"Most doctors don't want their patients to understand them! They prefer to keep their work a mystery. If patients don't understand what a doctor is talking about, they won't ask him questions. Then the doctor won't have to be bothered answering them.

"A good doctor should try to spell things out simply for his patients. Patients make better recoveries when they understand what the doctor is saying to them. They have confidence in him. Too many doctors forget this."

2. In general, why are doctors so close-mouthed about a patient's condition, treatment and prognosis?

Dr. Isaac Djerassi, Director of Research Hematology at the Mercy Catholic Medical Center in Darby, Pa., a cancer researcher who is reporting five-year "cures" in 70 percent of leukemia patients:

"To be frank with a patient is difficult, and it can be unpleasant. Many doctors are afraid of it. They learn from experience that they can get into trouble by being frank, so they stay away from it. It is time-consuming, too. You have to give more time to the patient, and a lot of doctors think they can't afford it.

Brutal or compassionate?

"Furthermore, there are several ways of being frank with a patient. You can be brutal, or you can be compassionate and understanding. Some doctors are incapable of being frank with compassion.

"I spend hours with every cancer patient who comes into our hospital, explaining his condition to him, the treatment I propose to give him, the side effects that may occur, and the fact that every cancer patient has a good chance of recovery today. The most important thing you can do for a cancer patient is to build up his hope.

"Some things I don't say, of course. I'm absolutely against telling a cancer patient that he is going to die. There are proponents of telling 5-year-old children, 'You have leukemia and you are going to die.' I'm flabbergasted, I am opposed. I hate the approach, and I hate the people who are doing it.

DR. ISAAC DJERASSI

DR. JOHN P. MERRILL

"But, otherwise, I lay my cards on the table with my patients. They want it that way."

3. Many specialists run their offices like assembly lines. Do they take enough time to check each patient thoroughly?

Dr. John P. Merrill of the Harvard Medical School and the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital in Boston, who performed the world's first kidney transplant:

"Some do, and some don't. They have too many patients to see. With all the present-day emphasis on providing medical care for everybody, we doctors are now compelled to practice assembly-line medicine.

No hospital diagnosis

"In the old days, I could put a patient in the hospital for diagnostic purposes. I could go over him carefully, on my own time, without being hurried, and give him a really thorough work-up. All that is gone now. They won't even let me hospitalize a patient for diagnosis anymore.

"When a patient with an undiagnosed medical condition goes to the hospital today, it's strictly an assembly affair. A young doctor runs him through a series of tests. A consultant reviews the results of the tests, and that's that. There is practically no personal contact. It's the same thing with many physicians at their private offices. They have so many patients to see that they've got to run them in and out. Frankly, I think a doctor takes much better care of you when he has some personal interest in you.

"Eighty percent of the people that walk into a doctor's office have something that is going to get well anyway. What they truly want is to have the doctor listen to their trouble and be sure that he's ruled out anything that might be bad. They're asking to be reassured, and doctors just don't have the time for it."

4. Can you expect to be treated with dignity when you go into a hospital as a patient?

Dr. Calvin H. Plimpton, president of the Downstate Medical Center in New York City and dean of its College of Medicine:

"Unfortunately, there are still hospitals where a patient does not get the respectful treatment from the medical staff and employees he is entitled to. The trouble is that some hospitals get to be so big and diverse that they can lose sight of their patients.

"In my opinion, every hospital patient has certain inalienable rights. A clinic or a ward patient must be kept as fully informed of his medical situation as a patient in a private room attended by his family doctor. Before a patient undergoes any treatment, he should receive from the physician in charge of his case full information as to the specific procedure and treatment, the risks, and the options for other treatment available. Only then can he give 'informed consent'.

"In our hospital, we insist on complete privacy for the examination, treatment and medical records of every patient. No one—specialist, resident or intern—who is not connected with a case can be present at an examination without the patient's permission. And every doctor and nurse is required to protect each patient's privacy. I know that some doctors have been known to stand in a hospital corridor and say,

'You should see the liver I got in Room 6501—it's the size of a basketball' while the family was standing near them. That won't happen in our hospital.

"Considerate, confidential care is as much a part of the healing process as any medical or surgical procedure. Every hospital should demand it."

Repeating tests

5. Should doctors and hospitals insist on repeating X-rays and lab tests that you've already had? Must they put you to this additional expense?

Dr. Meyer Friedman, who directs the Harold Brunn Institute for Cardiovascular Research at Mount Zion Hospital in San Francisco:

"Yes, darn it, yes. A thorough, conscientious physician should put his patients to this expense whenever it is at all indicated. It's for the patient's good, not for the sake of the radiologist or the lab. I'll give you a case in point. A man with a heart condition came in to see me last March. He'd had an X-ray of his chest taken just the preceding November, so I was tempted not to order another one. However, I did because I wanted to find out if his heart had become larger. It was fortunate for the man. The X-ray disclosed a small malignant tumor in his left lung. We were able to operate in time to save his life.

"Take any blood count of the red or white cells. It can be outdated in three hours, much less three days or three weeks. Or take someone with kidney disease. He may have an acute infection with an inability to excrete waste products in the blood. A dangerous accumulation of them can develop in a very short period.

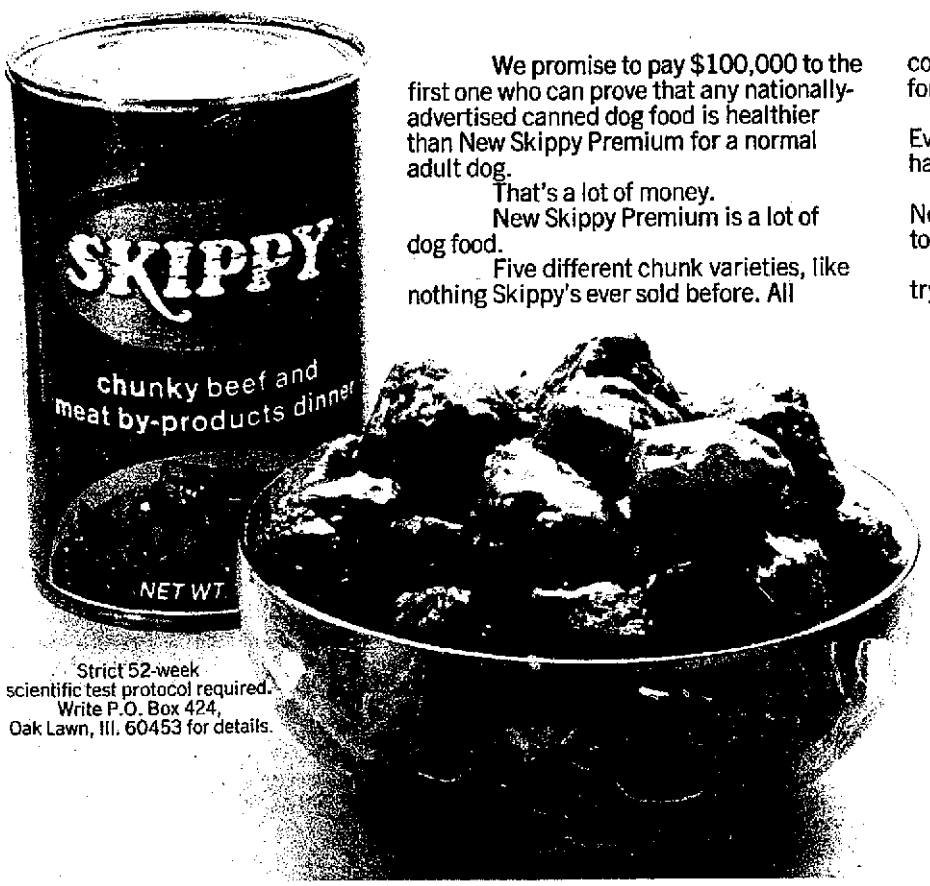

"It pays to be careful when a patient's life is at stake. Especially if it's yours."

"...Sometimes patients call and say 'I have no money, I cannot pay your bill'..."

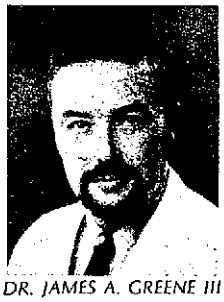

DR. MIN CHIU LI

6. Do most doctors allow patients to spread out payments on their bills?

Dr. Min Chiu Li of Nassau Hospital in Mineola, Long Island, who discovered the drug treatment that cures choriocarcinoma.

"If they don't, they should. I know that I do. If a patient doesn't pay his bill, I have my secretary call him up and find out what the problem is. She sees whether he can pay it over a year's time, or several months' time. Many patients come right out and say, 'If you can reduce your bill by 50 percent, I'll be glad to pay it.' I tell my secretary, 'Look, reason with this person and see what he can afford to pay.' Sometimes patients call up and say, 'Dr. Li, I have no money. I cannot pay your bill at all,' and I say, 'Forget about it.'

"People often ask me if I get angry when a patient asks me to reduce my bill. I don't. Not at all. Often their finances are absolutely exhausted. It is only appropriate for them to call me up and explain their problems. The patients that I get indignant at are the ones who don't bother to call me. They never come out with an explanation. They even disconnect their phones. Those are the guys that I send to the collection agency."

DR. JAMES A. GREENE III

7. Why can't doctors schedule their office hours better so you don't have to wait such a long time for them?

Dr. James A. Greene III, director of the Michigan Nephrology Center at Borgess Hospital in Kalamazoo:

"There is nothing I would like better than to have fixed office hours, and every doctor I know feels the same way. It would be great for me to know exactly where I am going to be every minute of the day, and know in advance just how big a medical problem each patient is going to have. I wish I could predict when each emergency was going to occur, but that just isn't the way medicine is. It isn't predictable or exact....

"If Mrs. Jones calls today and says she has another urinary tract infection, should we refuse to see her? No—we squeeze her in and others have to wait. People want their doctors to meet their emergencies even though it might inconvenience the doctor or the guy in the waiting room.

"I want my patients to know I will spend as much time as necessary with them when a serious situation comes up. If I detect unexpected symptoms of glomerulonephritis in a patient, I'll have to spend more time with her right then, no matter who's scheduled for the next appointment. We all wish it wasn't that way, but that's the way it has to be."

8. Why doesn't the average doctor make adequate provisions so you can reach him in an emergency?

Dr. Padraig Carney, chief of staff, Memorial Hospital Medical Center in Long Beach, Calif.:

"There is no reason why he can't. In the Long Beach area, the average physician does! At our hospital, we have a system that makes sure of it. 1.) The whereabouts of a doctor must be known by his receptionist at all times during office hours; 2.) After office hours, an answering service must be kept informed of the doctor's location; 3.) If the physician is on the golf course, at the movies, or on the beach, he must bring along an "air page" that beeps when he is urgently needed; 4.) Every doctor must designate another physician to whom he signs out for vacations or when he is unavailable for calls; 5.) In the rare case when a physician can't be reached in an emergency, the patient is directed to our hospital emergency room which has full coverage on a 24-hour basis.

"Our hospital and the local medical society have careful procedures for investigating patient complaints. Appropriate action is taken when physician laxity in this matter is confirmed.

"I am an obstetrician so I know how important an emergency call can be to a patient. Not that I enjoy them. I figure that I get about 20 emergency calls a week, and at least half of them come late at night or on my days off. You have to condition yourself to them. If they bug you too much, you should get out of the business."

DR. ROBERT W. FRATER

9. Why don't doctors return telephone calls from their patients?

Dr. Robert W. Frater, chairman of the Department of Surgery at the Albert Einstein College of Medicine in New York City:

"The average doctor is an extraordinarily busy man. He is dealing with human life in all its vagaries, so he has very little chance of regulating his day precisely. Beyond that, he moves around during the day from hospital to clinic to hospital to office to the operating room. It is sheer luck when a man like this can be reached immediately. Ask any doctor's wife! Ask her how she gets in touch with her husband during the day. She'll say that she usually doesn't even bother to try.

"A common cause of difficulty is the patient's insistence on speaking to the doctor himself. A properly trained secretary can answer most questions quite well. Certainly, the doctor's partner can do it for him.

"There is another side to the coin. A wise doctor gets fewer phone calls from patients because he explains things carefully to them when he sees them. He anticipates their future anxieties."

DR. EDMUND KLEIN

10. Is the traditional intimate doctor-patient relationship disappearing from America?

Dr. Edmund Klein, chief of the Department of Dermatology at Roswell Park Memorial Institute in Buffalo, N.Y.

"Yes. In fact, it has largely disappeared already. The end started about 25 years ago when powerful new tools of therapy—penicillin and the other antibiotics, for example—were placed in the hands of the physician. They replaced the old relationship by which the family doctor sat at the bedside and held the patient's hand while he was suffering. It became a great deal easier for a doctor to give a patient a shot of penicillin than to tell him not to worry, God will help him.

"Mind you, I'm not claiming that the two are mutually exclusive. You can say, 'Here's the penicillin. God will help you even more because the penicillin works.' The truth is that there is just as much room, if not more so, for the old-type doctor-patient relationship today because the doctor can tell the truth now. Twenty, 30 or 40 years ago, the doctor had to lie through his teeth in order to reassure the patient. He doesn't have to do that anymore.

"The trouble is that doctors don't have the time to care for patients and talk to them, too. Most American physicians are on a treadmill today, hurrying, hurrying, hurrying, because of the economics of our medical system. The more patients they see, the more money they earn. What we need is a medical system that lets the doctor spend more time with each patient. I'm lucky that way. I get the same salary whether I see one patient or 100 patients a day, so I can afford to spend as long with each patient as I wish. It's true that I work 16 to 18 hours a day, and seven days a week. That's my idea of fun, though."

You haven't seen a horoscope like this before, unless you have actually seen one of our in-depth personalized horoscopes. We invented computerized astrology 5 years ago when we learned that millions of people were interested in personal authentic astrology, not the short forecasts found in newspapers.

Many people could not afford the time and money required to have a personalized horoscope cast by a qualified astrologer. Such reports could cost up to $200.00

Newspaper and magazine astrology is based on the twelve Sun Signs, so everyone in the world born during the same period gets the same horoscope — 12 possibilities in all. Authentic astrology is based on the month, day, year, time and place of birth, with the positions of all the planets taken into account — so the possibilities of variation are infinite. For instance, two people born on the same day in the same city, but at different times, get different horoscopes. Two people born on the same day at the same time, but in different places, get different horoscopes.

Astroprofile is an individual, 10,000 word report all about you and you only. It describes your character as well as your potential in life, love and business. # My Favorite Jokes

by Phyllis Diller

EDITOR'S NOTE: Dressed in strange clothes, punctuating her jokes by flicking her super-long cigarette holder, Phyllis Diller on stage is a stylish "weirdo." But wait—she will describe her "family" characters, husband Fang, her mother-in-law, etc., and compared with those zanies she's the narrative voice of reason. It's a dazzling dynamic; the bizarre narrator and her more outrageous cast of characters, and it keeps the comedy flowing.

Since her much publicized face-lift in February, 1972, Phyllis has incorporated some of that experience into her act and more recently has added new characters. "I added my mother, 'Mommy Ding-a-ling,' she sits in the kitchen and kills flies with a hammer. She watches the news on television, and changes the channels with her cane, and my sexy sister 'Sexpot.' " Phyllis Diller is a star of nightclubs, television and movies. Here are some of the things she and her comedy characters are up to:

I adore my sister, Sexpot. She wears so little clothing, once a week she does her laundry in the blender.

I know a kid in Hollywood who has 12 grandmothers.

Do you realize we are living in the midst of the world's greatest sexual revolution? What do you want to bet that I end up on the losing side?

Fang is such a hypochondriac—he heats his Band-Aids.

Movies have gotten so filthy. We went to a drive-in one night—the car had to be over 21.

This is the age of specialists. I go to the world's greatest eye, ear, nose and throat man. If anybody ever walked in with a whole body—he'd pass out! You ought to see his writing. Nobody can read his prescriptions. Everytime I get a prescription filled, it costs me double—because I have to pay the woman who reads tea leaves to interpret his writing. The last prescription he wrote, I handed it to the pharmacist—he gave me all the money in the cash register and put his hands up. The next one he gave me, I took directly to the bank. They opened two accounts for me and told me to call an aspirin in the morning.

Everybody is feeling the pinch. When was the last time you saw George Burns with a whole cigar?

The other day I priced a slice of liver. The butcher said: "That'll be $2.98." I said: "It's for dinner. It's not a transplant!"

Most vending machines are crooked. I know one who owns a house in Bel Air.

And if you work in an office you've really been had. All they do is take up collections. I worked in an office once where they collected enough money to form their own government.

"Put your credit card where your mouth is!"

One woman took up so many collections her right hand turned into a cigar box.

One day a guy passed out in the office. They had a bouquet of flowers on his desk before he touched ground.

Fang could never work in an office, because he's too cheap. He didn't want to spend $2 for a marriage license until I convinced him it worked out to only 2 cents a pound.

ARNELLA FLYNN: SEEKS MODELING CAREER

Errol's Progeny

*The late Errol Flynn who flashed to screen fame in the 1940's in countless potboilers—*Captain Blood, Dodge City, Charge of the Light Brigade, Robin Hood, Sea Hawk, Dawn Patrol—was married to three of the most beautiful girls in Hollywood: Lili Damita, Nora Eddington and Patrice Wymore.

While he was succumbing to the excesses of debauchery—too many women, too much liquor, too much cocaine—Flynn succeeded in fathering four legitimate children.

By Lili Damita he had a tall, handsome and adventurous son, Sean, presumed killed three years ago as a war correspondent in Cambodia. By Nora Eddington, whom he met in the course of a highly publicized Los Angeles rape trial, he had two daughters, Deidre and Rory. By Patrice Wymore, his widow who now runs a boutique in Jamaica, he had a third daughter, Arnella.

A few weeks ago, Arnella, 19, showed up in London looking for work as a model. A strikingly beautiful, green-eyed blonde, Arnella by this time should have found plenty. She is tall, curvaceous, and like her father, marvelously photogenic.

A Question of Ethics

In a recent four-part series, the University of Minnesota daily examined the traditional practice of professors requiring students to buy books they have written.

Last quarter, for example, faculty members of 35 departments of the university "established their own publications as required reading in classes they taught..."

This practice has been ongoing for decades in colleges and universities all over the country. Is it a racket, a gimmick, a device by which professors augment their incomes through book royalties? Or do professors really think they have written the best books on their subjects and so require their students to read them?

Some time ago two U. of Minnesota faculty members decided that they would avoid any suspicion of conflict of interest by refusing to accept royalties from books sold to their students. Joseph Chaiklin, a professor of communications disorders, donates his royalties from student book sales to the American Speech and Hearing Association.

Roger Benjamin, associate professor of political science, allows his students to decide what to do with the royalties he earns from his book, Political Development. The book sells for $3.95, and Benjamin gets a 40-cent royalty on each sale. Some students vote to keep the royalty for themselves. Others contribute it to a fund to buy library books.

Both Chaiklin and Benjamin say they do not feel that the acceptance by a teacher of such royalties constitutes an automatic conflict of interest. It's just that they prefer to be, like Caesar's wife, beyond suspicion.

ALICE COOPER

They're Trying to Ban Alice

Leo Abse, a member of Parliament, has asked the British Government to ban freak rock star Alice Cooper from performing.

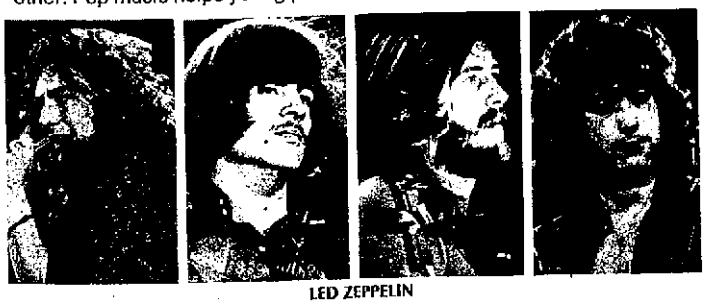

Abse says the idea came from his two children, Toby, 16, and Bathsheba, 15.

"They tell me Alice is absolutely sick," Abse explains, "and I agree with them. I regard his act as an incitement to infanticide for his subteen-age audience. He is deliberately trying to involve these kids in sadomasochism. He is peddling the culture of the concentration camp. Pop is one thing; anthems of necrophilia are another. Pop music helps young people overcome their sense of isolation. But this is not what this chap is up to."

Cooper who comes from Phoenix, Ariz.—his real name is Vincent Furnier—offers an act which features a mock guillotine, mutilated heads and limbs, and horror in general. It is considered a put-on.

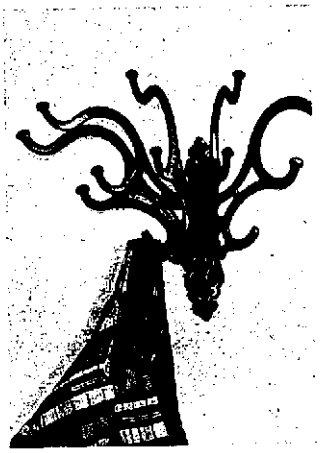

Alice has appeared in Britain several times without complaint, and this is the first occasion an Englishman has tried to ban him from the country.

If Abse succeeds in his ban, it could well lead to a reaction from this side of the Atlantic, with Americans saying let's keep out the British acts. The most successful act of late has been Led Zeppelin, four young guys from Birmingham and London who've broken box-office records all over the United States. This quartet is expected to earn $30 million this year, taking $4.5 million from their seven-week tour of America. Their latest album is expected to sell some 3 million copies.

LED ZEPPELIN

"I found this thing that turns one foot of wall into a coat closet" only $3.98 says Wallace Brown.

She was after me for more coat hanging space. This wrought iron, colonial coat rack screws to any wall. Has five movable arms. Hangs up to 15 coats. Only $3.98, two for $7.50.

Man who invented this must have had a wife like mine—never enough hanging space.

And just plain coat hooks—they look ugly—strung out along the wall, take up a lot of space.

So this man took the principle of the old-fashioned coat rack, with arms that stuck out on all sides for coats. Only he mounted the five coat-hanging arms on a flat piece of wrought iron that screws onto the wall. Just need about one foot of wall space. Five hook arms stick out at different angles. Lets you hang as many as 15 coats on it.

And as if that weren't enough, this wall coat rack is good looking. Black wrought iron. Heavy duty heavy weight. Solid. Of colonial design. Fits into hall, kitchen, mud room. Money back if not just plain amazed.

remarkable failure

The first time you use it to warm up leftovers, freshen buns, steam rice, you'll wonder how you lived a day in the kitchen without this cooking utensil.

But it wasn't invented for that. The famous gourmet cook, Dione Lucas, told everyone that this was for steaming clams, without having the clams touch the water.

She considered it a failure, because that's not what people used it for. Literally thousands own it, because it is the most remarkable way to warm up things without worrying about burning them or such.

Looks like a heavy-gauge lotus blossom. Is perforated.

You fill the bottom of any pot, with water. Put whatever you want to steam or warm up in the metal steamer basket. Then settle the basket into the pot. Legs at the bottom of the steamer basket keep the food out of the water. Leaves of steamer basket fold in, so it fits snugly into any pot. Ring on top to lift out. Wipes clean. Mirror bright stainless steel. Steams rice, vegetables, shell fish, freshens rolls, drains spaghetti. Extra plus—food doesn't touch water, so nutrient value doesn't boil away. Money back if not completely fascinated with this. 5½" at bottom. Opens to 9½" at top.

It was originally made to sell at $5.95, but we got the price down to $3.98 where it should be—by pushing and shoving a little. Only $3.98.

Fearless Bob Dunbar Goes to the Rescue

by Richard Harrington

HAINES JUNCTION, CANADA.

In peace or war, Bob Dunbar makes his living flying a helicopter on hazardous missions. For two years his theater of operations was Vietnam, where he collected 23 medals, was shot down twice, and wounded four times. Nowadays he does his flying in the Yukon Territory, just south of Alaska, where the enemies are snow, ice, mists and winds—every bit as lethal as Vietcong fire—and sometimes even harder to anticipate.

To a helicopter pilot, the frozen North presents a set of hazards all its own, for the air currents are tricky and treacherous, the snowstorms are sudden and blinding, and the vast wasteland is inaccessible to rescuers. But if Dunbar is at all uneasy about his demanding job, he shows no sign of it.

"We love the out-of-doors in general and the North in particular," says the 26-year-old pilot, explaining why he, his blond wife Cheryl, and their 3-year-old daughter Heather have been living in the extreme northwest tip of Canada since 1970.

Dunbar, a native of West Virginia, learned to fly in the U.S. Army.

"I was 18 when I joined," he says, "and they put me straight into helicopter training. Later I got a fixed-wing license, too."

For two years, Dunbar flew the same armed gunship in Southeast Asia. He piled up 800 air hours, and counted a total of 78 bullet holes in his chopper. One of his personal souvenirs is a helmet with two holes marked "In" and "Out," indicating the course of a Cong machine-gun bullet that creased his scalp.

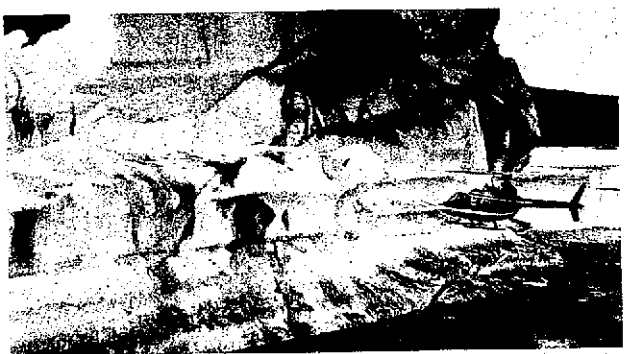

When his battle tour ended in 1968, Dunbar returned to the States for 18 months as an instructor in an Army helicopter school in Texas. But then the spell of the Yukon prevailed, and with his bride he headed for Alaska. In April, 1970, he heard that the Trans North Turbo Air Company needed a helicopter pilot who wasn't afraid of challenging work in an isolated part of the world.

You can't miss it

To get to Bob and Cheryl's homestead, you turn off the Alaska Highway at Mile 1013, three miles east of Haines Junction (pop.: 200), deep in the Yukon Territory. Half a mile down the narrow bush road is a 6000-foot gravel runway called Pon Lake Airstrip. Sometimes a small plane stops off there on the way to or from Alaska, but its principal user is Bob Dunbar's helicopter.

What's his job? Mostly it's keeping a watchful eye on the vast, newly created Kluane National Park—8500 square miles of rugged terrain that includes huge icefields as well as 19,850-foot Mt. Logan, North America's second highest peak.

Dunbar does everything from battling forest fires to rescuing mountain climbers. Even his more routine missions, like ferrying naturalists, ecologists, photographers and park personnel, demand the utmost skill and coolness.

Dunbar makes a precarious landing on a narrow ice shelf in Kluane National Park, Canada. Perilous flights like this are all in his day's work.

Dunbar, who averages 1000 hours a year in the helicopter, does not regard himself as a hero, but his Yukon achievements rank with his military feats for sheer skill and daring. Once he rescued five men trapped in the middle of a forest fire. He first airlifted three of the group, dropped them in the shallows of a river where they would be safe from the flames, then went back and got out the other two just before the advancing fire reached them. Last May he plucked two mountaineers from Mt. Steele, another lofty peak. Both had broken several bones during a slide down a precipice.

Bear turns tail

Perhaps his most unconventional assignment came when he was called to rescue a group of climbers from a grizzly bear which had raided their camp food supply and come back for second helpings. No firearms are allowed in the national park, so the hunters could do nothing but huddle in their tent while the bear prowled around. Bob was summoned by radio, and the sound of the whirlybird put the bear to flight. A confirmed conservationist, Bob was content to watch the bear scoot off over a ridge. "Anyhow, the climbers had a good story to tell when they got home, and maybe the bear did, too," he says.

Cheryl Dunbar shares Bob's love for the Yukon's solitudes, harshness, and vast vistas. Both are from Rowlesburg, W. Va., where they were childhood sweethearts, and they've been married six years. Three-year-old daughter Heather finds the snowy Yukon a paradise, as does her pet black poodle Maxie. Later on, when Heather is of school age, the Dunbars may have to make a change in their life pattern. The nearest school is at Whitehorse, 110 miles up the Alaska Highway, which also is the headquarters site of Trans North Turbo Air.

She's on the air

Right now, though, there's plenty to occupy the family. Cheryl acts as a radio operator, using a UHF set in her living room to keep in touch with Bob when he's flying and with company headquarters in Whitehorse. She shares her husband's delight in the out-of-doors, going trailbiking with him in the summer and snowmobiling in the winter.

The Dunbars have a spacious, comfortable, oil-heated new house which the company built for them right beside the helicopter pad. Cheryl is in charge of decorating it, and she's fitted it out in warm colors, with furniture bought in Mexico and carvings made in Alaska by Eskimo artists.

"It's a cozy house by any standards," says Cheryl Dunbar. "We have everything we need for comfort on the inside. And out of my window I can see moose, wolves, lynx and other creatures of the primitive wilderness. I have the best of both worlds."

WHY PLANT A GROUND COVER?

In many areas and situations, ground covers are more appropriate and more satisfactory than turf. They are able to grow and thrive in sun OR shade, and in poor soil.

On steep slopes where mowing is difficult, ground cover is much more effective and much less laborious to maintain than grass. Ground covers hold the soil as well as turf and the textures are far more interesting.

Small areas of grass are a continual chore to keep mown and trimmed but ground covers require almost no care. They are excellent protection and soil conditioners. They hold the fallen leaves from blowing away, thus helping to add annually to the humus content.

WHY CREEPING RED SEDUM?

One of Sedum's most valuable assets is its full time beauty. Lush foliage begins in early spring, and star-shaped wine red flowers delight the viewer from late June through September. The attractive semi-evergreen foliage lasts well into winter, maintaining its rich green and bronze color nearly all year round.

Besides being one of the loveliest of the ground covers, Sedum also rates high on the other requirements. It is hardy, grows well in sun or partial shade, in sandy soil, clay soil, or good soil.

Its thick foliage and root system hold the soil on slopes or banks. The neat 3-4" cover forms a dense perennial mat to bring green and wine red beauty to slopes, borders, rocky areas, anywhere beauty and durability are needed.

Each plant will easily and quickly spread to fill one sq. ft. Sedum spreads evenly, maintains its uniform smooth beauty at all stages of growth. Unlike some other ground covers, Sedum, also called "Dragon's Blood," stays where you put it — does not straggle out into places where it doesn't belong. Sedum is almost indestructible, enduring and persisting against heavy climatic and nutritional odds.

FULLY GUARANTEED

All items guaranteed to be of high quality, exactly as advertised and to arrive in good healthy condition or purchase price will be refunded. RETURN SHIPPING LABEL ONLY —you may keep the plants. (One year limit).

SEND this Special Offer Coupon TODAY to receive your Red Sedum and Peonies!

Now is a Good Time to Order RED SEDUM!

Your young Sedum plants will establish themselves and begin to spread a few days after planting. In a month or so they will already be 3-4 inches in diameter. They may lose their foliage as the first winter progresses but will leaf out again in early spring. During a long growing season they may reach 12" in diameter, always maintaining their neat regulated shape.
